

Students raise $813 for Boston Marathon victims

A silent auction, Hawaiian Time fundraiser and a Five Guys fundraiser all contributed towards help for the Boston Marathon bombing victims and a potential "A" for the students in the Project Boston group. Antonio Matic, the groups project manager, was very pleased with the results of their philanthropic project.

"Everything went really well, we had a great turn out as far as I'm concerned," said Matic.

They raised a total of $813.68 between the three combined fundraisers. $44.31 came from proceeds from Five Guys and $32.37 came from proceeds from Hawaiian Time. However, the largest portion was $737 from the silent auction event held Saturday, May 18. Money raised at the silent auction mostly came from the auction itself, raffles and individual donations.

Although $813 is a healthy contribution towards The One Fund Boston, they did not meet their set goal of $2,500. Matic believes that this is partly due to it being on a Saturday, during the first big rain in a couple of weeks. Another concern was that the promotion for the silent auction and the restaurant fundraisers wasn't strong enough.

People from around the community showed up in Gregory Forum on May 18. Along with a silent auction, people played card games to help raise money Boston Marathon victims. Funds were also raised from Five Guys and Hawaiian Time eventually adding up to $813.68.

"As far as the execution of the event, our group did a flawless job. As far as attendance, it could have been higher, but that's just part of the game," said Matic.

Donations to The One Fund Boston can still be made at www.onefundboston.org. The original article explaining the project and the class it is for, "Business students raise money for Boston victims", was in Volume 46, Issue 21 and can be found under the "News" tab at www.theclackamasprint.com.
