The Starlight Parade, one of the most popular events of the Rose Festival, took place Saturday night. More than 300,000 spectators lined the streets of downtown Portland to watch more than 100 floats illuminate the city. The parade lasted several hours on a course that was slightly over two miles long. The festival continues this week with Fleet Week.

AD CLARIFICATION

On Wednesday, May 22, we ran an advertisement meant to garner interest from students in joining The Print. Our designer used a "hostage note" motif to relay a playful message - that you have to join The Print's editorial staff in order to receive a tuition waiver from The Print.

It was brought to our attention that the ad may be misunderstood by students, and that it instead read as though student tuition waivers were being messed with.

We apologize for the confusion caused over a low-key joke, and encourage those confused by the advertisement to reach out to Financial Aid services for assistance.
