A milestone for the Pilot project

BY JOHN GERRITSMAS

The first project of the Middle Applegate Pilot is a timber sale known as Pilot Joe. It sold to Boise Cascade Wood Products on September 15 for $230,606 and will yield about 1.5-million board feet of timber. On its heels will be noncommercial thinning and fuels reduction contracts, but Congress's progress on finalizing the fiscal year 2012 (which began October 1) federal budget will have a direct influence as to when the contracts will be let. With these two sets of projects, a portion of the first phase of the Middle Applegate Pilot is complete. However, all the discussions, planning, and design work will be for naught if the project resembles a different outcome than what was envisioned. Hence, a crucial—and likely more important phase of Pilot Joe—is about to begin.

Jerry Franklin, PhD, and Norm Johnson, PhD, have stated repeatedly that a great design is worthless if the implementation is suspect. To that end, the collaborative partners of the Pilot project and the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) provided for integrating the planning and implementation personnel on the project, provided for a multi-party monitoring plan, and provided for a consultant with expertise in logging systems to meet restoration goals. As an unexpected benefit, the purchaser of Pilot Joe was strongly represented in the collaboration effort, and was party to much of the conversation about the goals and outcome of the restoration principles reflected in Pilot Joe. Incidentally, a number of industry representatives are a part of the collaborative effort. Thus, there is plenty of “front-end” loading to have the implementation of Pilot Joe and the subsequent thinning and fuels reduction contracts be as successful as they can possibly be.

The next phase of the Pilot will encompass lands in the Thompson Creek drainage (approximately 13,000 acres to assess for restoration needs). We will utilize the same planning principles used in Pilot Joe. That is, the habitat needs for older forest species will be considered key zones to maintain (increase their “hang” time as Dr. Franklin likes to say), and a strategy to reduce the influence of wildfire on those key habitats will be a primary driver for selecting stands for restoration. In addition, the publicly developed criteria for prioritizing stands for restoration will come into play much stronger than with the first Pilot projects. Key issues in this next phase will be the protection of the northern spotted owl and managing for the appropriate transportation system. Anything that is learned during the implementation of Pilot Joe will be incorporated (adaptive management) into the ongoing planning and project design for phase two.

The transparent and collaborative nature of Pilot Joe will be continued. There will be numerous public involvement opportunities as well as field trips and joint planning. We will continue the practice of community representation on the interdisciplinary team (IDT), as well as providing information on the BLM's website (www.blm.gov/or/districts/medford). Please refer to the website for information on public participation. Those who have been on the hard mail and email lists for Pilot Joe will continue to be notified about all Pilot activities.

We will be adding a new collaborative feature. The Small Diameter Collaborative and the Applegate Partnership will jointly be hosting a multi-party, collaborative work group to assess the current status and future needs of the transportation system (i.e., roads). One of the key issues associated with the first project was the issue of roads, though in the end, Pilot Joe did not have any new road construction. Therefore, it is very important to have discussions, fact-finding and understanding of the road system currently in place, and identify needs for the future. The group will have representation from the community, the collaborative partners, industry, environmental organizations, and BLM. The fact-finding will provide good baseline information for the next phase of the Pilot as well as identifying opportunities to change the road system (additions and/or deletions).

If you wish to stay informed on and/or join the aforementioned and other opportunities related to the Pilot, please contact Stephanie_Kellerher@blm.gov, or call 541-618-2205.
