The Impossible

Reviewer rating: 5 Apples

(1 Apple—Don't bother, 5 Apples—Don't miss)

PG-13; Adventure, Drama; 107 minutes

Opened: December 21, 2012

Cast: Naomi Watts, Ewan McGregor, Tom Holland, Oaklee Pendergast

Director: Juan Antonio Bayona

Writer: Sergio G. Sánchez

The Impossible is based on true events. This movie has us sitting on the edge of our seats as we go on a journey with the Bennett family: Maria (Naomi Watts), Henry (Ewan McGregor), and their three sons. They decide to spend Christmas vacation in paradise, a lovely resort in Thailand.

Only minutes into the movie, the deadliest tsunami in human history ravages the shores of cities across Southeast Asia. The Bennett family is separated from one another but never give up hope of finding each other. There are so many wounded, dying, and dead, but while it is a traumatic story, it is also beautiful.

Naomi Watts plays the mother in one of her finest and most physically demanding performances, and was nominated for Best Actress by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences. This intense and compelling family melodrama from Spanish director Juan Antonio Bayona sets a new standard for disaster cinema—it is emotionally exhausting and ultimately uplifting. With the powerful staging of the catastrophe and the waves seemingly flowing into the theater, it simply takes your breath away. In fact, the story has an emotional undertow that is sure to sweep you away.

The tidal wave and aftermath scenes are riveting, giving one the feeling of actually being there. The amazing computer-generated effects bring the tsunami right into the theater. It is a real roller-coaster ride with a superb cast.

Waiting for the Rain and Walking Still

by Zimbabwean author Charles Mungoshi

It's been a year since my husband and I spent the month of February 2012 in south-central Africa, where in Zimbabwe we strolled with and petted lions, albeit young, carefully guarded ones. But a small book that I read while in Zimbabwe is what has lingered in the edges of my consciousness throughout the past year.

When many of us think of Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia), we think of short articles and photos like those in PARADE magazine's annual ranking of the world's worst dictators, which always includes Robert Mugabe, Zimbabwe's president. Or maybe we remember books and stories and histories about Rhodesia. But is there any modern literature, any fiction, being written in that sad country? You bet there is! Charles Mungoshi has won the prestigious PEN Literary Award—twice. His 1975 novel Waiting for the Rain is universal in its evocation of an extended family trying to deal with a wayward son. Why is this son, provocatively named Lucifer, wayward? He wants to leave his home, leave his parents, his large family, his village and his culture to live in the “modern” world. He won't settle down to work and marry and be the head of his family as expected; he destroys the gift of sacred medicine lovingly prepared for his departure.

I do not have my tattered copy of Waiting for the Rain because I gave it to a waiter in the hotel where we were staying. It was as though I had given him gold and diamonds. And he did insist that I write a gift inscription inside the book—dated, to him, and from me—to prove that he had not stolen such a treasure. I do love the animals of Africa, everything from the industrious dung beetles to the majestic big cats and the elephants, but reactions by Africans to my gifts of books are my most treasured memories of Africa.

Mungoshi's more recent book Walking Still is an anthology of short stories. These nine stories also speak to universal concerns: cultural change, war, family dynamics. One story is about a working wife who is ultimately more successful than her husband, another is about a husband who eventually reveals his homosexuality, and the final story, “Sacrifice,” is about a young daughter whose education is cut short because she is scheduled to be sacrificed to the gods. Well, perhaps this last story isn't so universal, you may say. Is Shirley Jackson's American classic “The Lottery” universal? I would assert that Mungoshi's stories have just that kind of tension and fine clarity of insight into the human psyche.

If you want a different view of Zimbabwe than that portrayed in the books set in the former Rhodesia, or in the “Worst Dictators” annual list, give Charles Mungoshi's books—including his poetry if that is your bent—a look.
