

Not Only Waves Break on the Coast

When watching the Women's Professional Billiards Players (WPBA) on ESPN, you can see their competitiveness, talent, and skills. The nation's top 64 female 9-ball players will compete at Chinook Winds on Nov. 19-23. This is your chance to see these masters of the game live and in-person.

Allison Fisher currently is the No. 1-ranked female billiards player in America. She isn't called the "Duchess of Doom" for nothing.

After winning her first world-class competition at 17, Fisher moved to the U.S. from her hometown of Peach-haven, England, to pursue the WPBA's 9-Ball tour. She won the second tournament she ever played in and in seven years has won more 9-Ball tournaments than all the other professionals combined. Like Gretzky, Woods, Jordan, and other sports greats, she makes the impossible look easy and the difficult routine.

You may have seen her on ESPN. She wears all black when playing and has been said to "devour" her opponents. When you watch Jeanette Lee in person, it's easy to see how her nickname, "Black Widow," fits.

She's one of the most recognized pool players in the world (ranked No. 4) and her precision at the table is truly something to behold. Lee started playing pool in 1992 and in less than two years was ranked No. 1.

Ewa Laurance isn't just the ninth-best female pool player in the world, she's also the current WPBA president and has just written her third book on the subject.

She started playing billiards when she was 14 in her native town of Gayle, Sweden. At 17, she won the European Championship and then decided to live in the U.S. She was the No. 1-ranked pool player for two years and is dedicated to furthering the sport of billiards.

These ladies are just three of the 64 professional players coming from all over the nation to play in the National 9-Ball Championships at Chinook Winds. For die-hard fans, recent admirers, and those just curious about the sport, this event can't be missed.

On Nov. 19 at 6 p.m., the Celebrity Pro-Am Shootout will benefit My Sister's Place, a local women's shelter. Celebrities include David Naughton, Andrew Prine, and John Ashton, plus WPBA stars.

Tickets range from $5 to $25. An all-day pass for the finals on Nov. 23 is available for $50. Discounts will be given to APA and BCA cardholders.
