Cheap Trick Wants You to Want Them at Chinook Winds

I Want You To Want Me, Dream Police, and Surrender are just a few of the songs that will bring back the good old days on April 21-22 when Cheap Trick comes to Chinook Winds Casino Resort.

Cheap Trick is one of those bands that just kept pumping out hits year after year. Since 1973, it has evolved into an international rock band with numerous hit records.

Rick Nielsen and bassist Tom Petersson formed the band in the early '70s under the name Sick Man of Europe. After adding drummer Bun E. Carlos and vocalist Robin Zander, the name of the band changed to Cheap Trick.

Between 1974 and the band's first album in 1977, Cheap Trick toured constantly, playing more than 200 concerts a year, including opening slots for Queen, The Kinks, KISS, and Santana.

Cheap Trick signed with Epic Records in 1976, releasing its debut album. The record sold well in America, but failed to chart. The group became a massive success in Japan, however, with its album going gold upon release.

The band's second album, In Color, featured slicker production and quieter arrangements that spotlighted the band's melodic skills. This became the jumpstart to years of hit albums.

1998 saw the band rebuilding by trying to restore normal relations with Sony and the music retail community and establishing its own record company, Cheap Trick Unlimited. In 2001, Cheap Trick recorded its first studio album in six years – Special One.

"This time," Zander says, "each of us had songs and bits and pieces of songs."

In May 2003, Cheap Trick decided to bring its record label to Big3 Entertainment. Under the deal, Cheap Trick Unlimited/Big3 Entertainment released Special One.

"We brought our label to Big3 because we got tired of being record moguls and riding around in limos and making the big bucks. We thought we'd give Big3 a chance," said Carlos.

"Special One is the 27th disc in the span of 26 years. They're a healing force in music," said George Martin, producer of The Beatles.

Show time is 8 p.m. each night. Ticket prices range from $25 to $40.
