Kiwanis Learns About Tribal Culture

by Teresa Simmons

The 2006 Northwest Regional Kiwanis Convention was more than two years in the planning and the biggest convention ever held at Chinook Winds Casino Resort.

Approximately 800 people attended the convention in August, filling hotel rooms across town and giving Lincoln City merchants a reason to smile.

Conference planners asked if the Siletz Tribe would be willing to share some of its culture and history with the attendees, incorporating it into the overall program. So for the first time ever, Chinook Winds had an outdoor salmon bake.

Charlie Black and Daniel Brown, in nearly gale-force winds, cooked up enough salmon in the traditional way to feed everyone. Kiwanians braved the wind and the cold to see how it was done.

Inside the casino, the Round Stone Singers set up their drum in one of the breakout rooms across from the convention center. Their songs could be heard all over the convention area and set the stage for Bud Lane's history presentation and display of basketry and regalia.

Everything was received with enthusiasm and interest by the convention attendees. We have received rave reviews about the entire convention.
