We have been getting a lot of calls lately, asking what is needed to become certified to receive USDA commodity foods.

The first thing that we need is a completed application. Along with the application, we will need a tribal ID (we serve all federally recognized tribes); Social Security cards for all household members (if you don't have a card, but know your number, that will work); picture ID for adult household members; all income verification, including unemployment benefits, child support received, SSA, SSI, SSD, tribal elder benefit, TANF, public or tribal assistance, foster care payments, veterans benefits, receipt for any money received from cash-paid jobs, and a receipt for money from family or friends.

If there is a household member who is 18 or older who does not have any income, they will complete a Zero Income form. College students receiving grants or scholarships need to provide that verification.

If you are paying for child care, we can deduct that from your income. If you are paying child support, we also can deduct that.

Remember that you cannot receive USDA commodities and food stamps at the same time.

We try to make the application process as easy as possible. If you need help filling out the application, come in or call and we will be glad to help.

If you would just like to see if you might be eligible but you don't know the income guideline, call and tell us your income and we can see if you might be eligible and we will mail you an application.
