

Vision Maker Media seeks proposals for public television media fund

LINCOLN, Neb. – Vision Maker Media has announced a March 15 deadline for proposals from independent and public television producers for the 2013 Public Media Content Fund.

With funding from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the Vision Maker Media Public Media Content Fund will award support to video projects with significant Native involvement – particularly projects that profile American Indian leaders, activists and artists – and help bring the projects to national broadcast on public television.

Submitted proposals must be post-marked by March 15, 2013.

“The purpose of this funding opportunity is to increase the diversity of voices in public media,” said Assistant Director Georgiana Lee (Navajo). “There are very few avenues open to documentary filmmakers and we believe that Vision Maker Media has a great responsibility to support the creation, promotion and distribution of Native media. We also believe that support from our organization can help open doors for various forms of additional funding for our filmmakers.”

Projects in any phase of production are eligible to apply for funding with Vision Maker Media. Awards for research and development range from $5,000 to $20,000; awards for production or completion can be up to $100,000; and new media awards range from $5,000 to $20,000.

Vision Maker Media does not fully fund programs and awardees are required to seek additional funding from other sources.

Programs selected for funding will be offered additional distribution opportunities, including educational and home DVD distribution through visionmakermedia.org. Theatrical, non-theatrical, television (free, pay syndicated and video-on-demand), multimedia and Internet broadcasting (i.e., podcasting and streaming) rights are included in this distribution opportunity.

“First and foremost, Vision Maker Media is looking for compelling Native stories. Priority will be given to projects intended for the series Native Word: Stories Past & Present,” said Executive Director Shirley K. Sneve (Rosebud Sioux). “Second, we would like to see programs that accurately illuminate aspects of contemporary Tribal cultures or peoples. The primary audience is PBS viewers, so Vision Maker Media wants stories that transcend American Indian and Alaska Native culture.”

Vision Maker Media convenes a panel of public television professionals, independent producers and Native resource experts to review submissions and recommend proposals for funding. Additionally, Vision Maker Media assists producers with fundraising, navigating the public television system for national broadcast, educational resource development, community engagement and marketing efforts.

Vision Maker Media, a nonprofit 501(c)(3) that receives major funding from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, shares Native stories with the world by advancing media that represents the experiences, values and cultures of American Indians and Alaska Natives.

Founded in 1977, Vision Maker Media is your premier source for quality American Indian and Pacific Islander educational and home videos.

All aspects of our programs encourage the involvement of young people to learn more about careers in the media – to be the next generation of storytellers. Located at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, we offer student employment, internships and fellowships.
