

Digital story workshop is a success

By Patti McKinney, Tobacco Prevention and Education Program Coordinator

As TPEP coordinator, I applied for and the Tribe was awarded a $5,000 Story Telling Grant from the Oregon Health Authority Office of Equity and Inclusion.

The timing coincided with a digital story telling workshop that provided technical skills for creating messages for healthy living and practices.

Joe Law, health promotion coordinator/health education consultant for Portland Indian Health Services, conducted a digital story workshop in Portland. He also provided a digital story workshop for Siletz staff.

To follow up for the Story Telling Implementation Project, Joe returned to Siletz to provide technical assistance. Powerful stories were developed to promote healthy behaviors and lifestyles and the participant's journey to get there.

A thank you to IS staff who helped coordinate the computer technical needs – Stuart Whitehead and Sunshine Keck – and to Brenda Bremner, George Nagel and Judy Muschamp for understanding the vision for potential and possibilities for future efforts.

A thank you also to Joe for technical project guidance and to Zebuli Payne for technical, creative guidance and motivational inspiration.

Case-Scott, member of UO band, plays in national spotlight

Hayley Case-Scott is a freshman member of the University of Oregon marching band who played in the 2015 Rose Parade in Pasadena, Calif., and at both of the Ducks' games during the college football playoffs, including the national championship game on Jan. 12.

She is the first chair flute player in the marching band, an instrument she has played since age 10. The now 18 year old received a four-year scholarship to UO.
