Dancers join singers in songs of healing and hope during the Shu'-'aa-xu Round Dance and Youth Prevention Summit at Taft High 7-12 in Lincoln City, Ore., on March 16. Held just a few days before the first day of spring, the event served as a reminder that the sometimes darker days of winter were receding and the lightness of spring was on its way. Participants enjoyed several hours of positive energy in the company of friends and family, and in meeting new friends too.

Siletz Tribe opposes transmission line, Jordan Cove LNG export facility

In a resolution passed March 15, the Tribal Council of the Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians made official its opposition to the planning, approval, construction and maintenance of the Malin to Coos Bay LNG (liquefied natural gas) transmission line and the Jordan Cove LNG export facility in Coos Bay.

This 229-mile liquefied natural gas pipeline from Malin in Klamath County to the export terminal in Coos Bay is being proposed by a Canadian Company, Pembina. The LNG line and export facility will not supply energy to U.S. companies or citizen consumers as the LNG would be shipped overseas from the proposed export facility in Coos Bay.
