before going over the association ground rules, purpose, and agreements.

“This is a safe space to voice concerns, raise questions, have a multitude of voices,” Knapp said. “The purpose of our association is to make Hillsdale a better place to live and work.”

Natalia Bronner, a 14-year resident of Hillsdale, spoke up first. She had submitted a motion regarding the association’s position on the infill plan.

“I learned about the Residential Infill Project in January,” she said. “I had thought it was only a Multnomah neighborhood issue. I had never heard anything about this from this neighborhood association so I decided to do some research.”

Bronner said she received a variety of comments from other neighborhood associations.

“I felt it was overlooked by the Hillsdale [Neighborhood] Association,” she said.

Bronner said she had tried to connect with the group with no luck. She then drew up a petition opposing the Residential Infill Project. Almost 70 people signed the petition, many chasing her down. Three were undecided and one for, leaving 64 opposed to the project.

“This would be the most significant change in Hillsdale in a generation,” she said. “It would impact the quality of life and burden the infrastructure. The HNA approved RIP without proper vetting.”

However, a letter dated March 31, from the Hillsdale board to Bronner, cleared up the matter of the association’s support.

“Though there have been multiple meetings relating to this issue,” the letter stated, “many within the HNA have expressed personal opinions. We have combed our records and have not located any documentation of a formal position on the Residential Infill Project.

“There has been some element of confusion [regarding] discrepancies between the memories of members and the written record,” the letter continued. “Without documentation, the Hillsdale Neighborhood Association has no formal stance on the Residential Infill Project.”

Nevertheless, Bronner submitted a motion with several requests. The motion included a statement in opposition to the Residential Infill Project, posting a public notice on the neighborhood’s website and in the Southwest Neighborhood News, the coalition’s newsletter.

Bronner also wants Hillsdale to prioritize the project discussion at future meetings and improve community involvement.

She also wants to see an analysis of the project’s impact on infrastructure and livability, and work with Hillsdale activists to provide all necessary support to oppose proposed changes.

According to the by-laws, adequate notice to Hillsdale members and residents is required.

Longtime member Rick Seifert re-meeting. The group adjourned after some additional discussion.

The Hillsdale Neighborhood Association meets at 6:45 p.m. the first Wednesday of every month at St. Barnabas Episcopal Church, 2201 SW Vermont St.
