Gambling aid by state unit helping many

A group of 1,651 people could be seated in many high school gymnasiums.

But because problem gamblers are notorious for not seeking help, it's a big number to be enrolled in Oregon's gambling-treatment programs.

"We've recorded a 43 percent year-to-year increase in the number of problem gamblers and their family members enrolled in Lottery-funded gambling treatment programs," said Jeffery J. Marotta, problem gambling services manager in the Oregon Dept. of Human Services.

"The average increase during the past five years was 17 percent," he said. "This year's is both the largest increase and the largest number we've ever seen."

National surveys show that fewer than 1 percent of problem gamblers seek treatment. Oregon has 2.3 percent enrolled in publicly funded programs, and Marotta said that hundreds or even thousands more receive help through Gamblers Anonymous, churches and private-pay therapists.

"The proportion of problem gamblers who seek help in Oregon is perhaps the highest in the world," Marotta said. He attributes the increase to Oregon's newly adopted approach.

"We use a public health framework that incorporates prevention, harm reduction and multiple levels of treatment that place emphasis on quality-of-life issues for the gambler, families and communities," he said.

Grant to RCC to help rural education

TUESDAY EVENING/LATE NIGHT

A federal distance education grant will help Rogue Community College (RCC) better serve students located throughout its rural district, an area that takes in some 4,600 square miles.

On Oct. 21, the college learned that it will receive $286,486 in U.S. Dept. of Agriculture (USDA) Rural Development funding. RCC was on of 71 successful applicants selected from 220 requests. The Distance Learning and Telemedicine grant will go toward expanding the Rogue Interactive Video Network (RIVN).

Services provided by the network will include college transfer classes, technical/career education, adult education courses, and English-as-asecond-language programs originating from RCC or other Oregon community colleges. It also will offer career and personal counseling, individual and group tutoring, and short-term training for local businesses.

RCCs Riverside Campus in Medford will serve as the hub of the new system, linking to several college sites: Illinois Valley Learning Center in Kerby, Workforce Training Center in White City, and Grants Pass Redwood Campus

The network also will connect with Southern Oregon Education Service District's (ESD) regional video system creating a video bridge that will join the college to other statewide educational video systems. These include 27 regional high schools as well as the Oregon Access Network and its 287 high schools, ESDs, universities and state agencies.

It's easier to ride a horse in the direction he's going.
