Oregon DHS head resigns

Lydia Lissman, of Salem, a 20-year state Human Services manager, resigned from the Oregon Dept. of Human Services (DHS) as assistant director for seniors and people with disabilities as of Jan. 31.

Since July 2001, Lissman, 55, has headed the 1,500-employee Seniors and People with Disabilities group that comprises 39 percent of the DHS budget.

"I've worked hard to achieve the goals that Oregonians have for serving seniors and people with disabilities," Lissman said. "It's a challenging job, and I look forward to putting my experience and energy to work in another area of state government," she said.

"Lydia has done excellent work for us," said DHS Director Bobby S. Mink. "She and her team have preserved services during some of the toughest fiscal times Oregon has seen. She has also responded vigorously to legislative mandates for greater accountability in our statewide services for seniors and people with disabilities," said Mink.

"Lydia leaves a strong executive team led by her deputy, James Toews," Mink said. "He is a highly qualified individual who cares deeply about services for seniors and people with disabilities." Toews, 54, of Portland, has been at DHS since 1985.

The DHS Seniors and People with Disabilities group is responsible for services to seniors and people with physical and developmental disabilities. It also determines eligibility for Social Security disability benefits under a contract with the federal government.

Lissman has been a DHS employee since 1982. Her experience includes working as assistant administrator of DHS' former Adult and Family Services (AFS) Division; branch manager for AFS; and state director of the DHS volunteer program. She also helped create state strategies to increase Oregonians' access to health care, and played a prominent role in Oregon's nationally recognized work in welfare reform.

"I'm grateful for the opportunity to serve Oregonians," Lissman said. "I credit the team for improving accountability and gaining needed efficiencies without sacrificing our most important services to seniors and people with disabilities," said Lissman.

Antibiotic awareness goal of AWARE

Public health officials at the state Dept. of Human Services have established a coalition to promote the wise use of antibiotics through a new campaign, the Alliance for Working for Antibiotic Resistance Education (AWARE).

AWARE brings together health-care providers, health plans, community organizations, industry and academic institutions to educate consumers on the proper uses of antibiotics.

"Resistant bacteria are an emerging problem," said Dr. Mel Kohn, state epidemiologist.

"We're seeing the development of more severe diseases, and they are difficult to treat."

Kohn said that too many prescriptions are being written unnecessarily and patients often ask for antibiotics when they aren't needed, helping create drug-resistant bacteria.

The problem recently drew new attention when the maker of a top-selling antibiotic said it would sponsor public service announcements about the problem of overuse as part of a legal settlement.

DHS has tracked patterns of Streptococcus pneumonia, a leading cause of meningitis, pneumonia and ear infections in the Portland area, since 1996. Every year the bacteria's resistance to antibiotics has increased, said Kohn.

AWARE's plan includes cautioning consumers against pressuring their health-care providers to prescribe antibiotics, using antibiotics for viral infections like colds, finishing an entire round of a prescribed medication, even if symptoms lessen, and to never share antibiotics, or use them without a prescription.
