Community Ed: Springboard to a world of new possibilities for valley residents

By BRITT FAIRCHILD Staff Writer

Finding instructors for Rogue Community College's Illinois Valley Community

Education isn't the hard part. It's filling the desks with students.

Enrollment for the winter term was so sparse that only three of the 14 courses scheduled were offered -- the rest were cancelled -- according to Pam Cooper, community education training services coordinator.

While the war with Iraq and the possible closure of Rough and Ready Lumber Co. could deter potential students from registering for spring classes, which begin on Monday, March 31, Cooper remains hopeful for a higher turnout.

"Education is a lifetime process," she said. "We can never know everything. There's always something new to learn."

Whether advancing old skills, developing new ones or introducing a new hobby, community education offers valley residents a variety of choices, from computer and writing courses to art workshops and self-improvement

Almost all of the I.V. community education classes are held at the RCC Kerby Belt Bldg. and IVHS. There is a fee for most of the courses, although Cooper said the instructors try to keep it low so more people can attend.

"We have a lot of very talented people out here who are willing to share their talents and skills," she said.

Twenty-eight classes, 20 of which are new, are scheduled for the spring term, including Carpentry "101," a course especially for women to teach basic construction information.

With a little more than a week left before classes were to begin, Leslie Kingsford, 55, was undecided on which class she would take.

'There are great choices this term," she said, noting how great her community education experience has been thus far.

"I come away enriched on many levels," Kingsford said. Plus "it gets me out of the house."

Not to mention the friends she's made.

Having taken a handful of classes during the past two years relating to her hobbies,
