seven days a week," Byron said.

With the number of retired people in the valley, Peggy said she isn't sure why there isn't more interest in volunteering at the museum.

A previous presentation at the I.V. Senior Center about volunteer possibilities proved fruitless, Byron added.

"You don't have to know a whole lot about the history (of the area)" the experienced volunteers can help with that, Peggy said. People just need to be willing to donate their time.

"This would (also) be a great place for families to come volunteer," she said, noting it is something she and her husband do together.

There are other changes the couple would like to see at the museum, however limited funds make them unlikely in the near future.

Byron said the museum has an annual budget of approximately $6,000.

"That's just to keep it open," he said.

"We run on pennies," Peggy said, adding that sometimes the volunteers buy needed office supplies out-of-pocket.

Admission prices and private grants are the main sources of funding. Although there are grants available, Peggy said they do not currently have any.

And raising admission prices -- $3 for adults, $1.50 for those 15 and older and free for those younger than 15 -- isn't something the Porrettas want because it might turn away guests.

In early June, before the museum hours expanded, the numbers of those visiting the museum was down from years past. There were maybe 300 visitors between the museum's open house on March 29 and early June, Byron said.

One way the museum board hoped to attract visitors was to put signs on each side of Redwood Hwy. notifying passersby of the Stith-Naucke House's, adjacent to the museum building, listing on the National Register of Historic Places. But they cost $300 a piece.

If there was enough money to go around, Byron said he would improve the way several of the museum's treasured items are displayed and kept. Improper storage often results in artifacts becoming warped, he said.

A drum carried in the Civil War by 15-year-old Union soldier Jim Dawley is perhaps the best example.

It is currently displayed with several other artifacts, when it should be kept on its own in a special viewing case, Byron said.

"(This) artifact is truly American history and it has to be preserved at all costs. I don't have any way to do it," he said.

Approximately 90 percent of the items in the museum are from Josephine County residents, but the museum does not receive county funds, Peggy said.

"This is the only museum in Josephine County that houses county artifacts and gets no assistance from the county," she said.

Church News

St. Patrick of the Forest Catholic Church

On Sunday, July 6, we will reflect on the words of three great Christian men: the prophet, Ezekial, Saint Paul, and the Gospel writer, Mark. Those who encountered them at that time may not have known how powerful their messages were. But in our time, we certainly recognize the fact that they were truly inspired by, and filled with, the Holy Spirit. The advantage for us is that we don't have to question their motives or their validity. We can believe their words are meant to teach us and lead us to the salvation promised by God.

Good Shepherd Lutheran

How many times in a day or a week do we physically touch others? Jesus teaches us that we can, as he did, touch others and have a positive effect on their lives.

Jesus raised the dead with touch, and cured a bleeding woman. We may not have these powers, but we can help others with a kind word, a soft touch or just a heartfelt handshake.

Activities this week: Saturday, July 5, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. car wash at Taylor's Country Store to raise money for summer youth pool parties; Sunday, July 6, 9 a.m., worship service.

I hate to think that people who had never been to your community would come away with this sort of event as their impression of Cave Junction as a whole.

I will naturally come back to visit in the future, but can assure you that I will not patronize the first motel ever again.
