now," Fox said.

After a mild and dry winter that left Oregon's mountains with a lower than normal snow pack, a long string of cool and rainy days this spring has buoyed hopes of Oregon farmers and ranchers who will rely on irrigation this summer.

There are still many areas where water shortages are expected, but things could have been a lot worse.

"I can't remember being so worried so late in the water year and then feeling so relieved heading into the summer, said Stan Fox, hydrologist with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Natural Resources Conservation Ser-

Despite high precipitation totals for April and much of May, many of Oregon's 27 irrigation reservoirs are not even close to being full as carryover from last year was low and the amount of snow that eventually feeds those reservoirs was relatively light. Overall reservoir storage in Oregon is about 70 percent of average.

"Washington is the only western state that is reporting above average reservoir storage right

Lending a hand would help Lovejoy

Lovejoy Hospice is seeking compassionate people to provide respite, lend a hand, or simply visit clients.

Team members might also help in the hospice offices or assist in the adult or children's bereavement programs. Lovejoy Hospice is also interested in volunteer chaplains.

Training will involve listening and communication skills, understanding end-of-life issues and care, the philosophy of hospice, grief and bereavement and the spiritual aspects of end of life.
