Bob's Corner

Although I enjoy a certain amount of limited cooking, I've never been asked to wear a chef's hat.

It's not that I'm totally a kitchen klutz. My chili concoction and my version of machaca have brought rave reviews. Or was it that after eating the stuff the eaters just started raving?

Anyway, the first time I remember cooking was at a primitive Boy Sprout camp in eastern San Diego County. I was assigned to cook dinner one night. The entrée was fish, not sure what kind. Didn't matter. When I got through cooking the heck out of it, everyone thought we were having large, misshaped potato chips for dinner. I was not assigned another meal.

Another time, in Escondido, I decided to make bread pudding and surprise Jan. I took the messy mass of bread odds and ends we'd been saving, whipped up a batch of "bread pudding" with other ingredients and plopped the thing in the oven.

When it was done we had enough bread pudding for maybe a battalion or two. When it was cool enough to eat, I proudly served it to Jan and the kids. They took first bites and then looked at each other. Oddly. Then at me. Also oddly. Jan said, "Did you put sugar in this?" And I had to admit that for some unknown reason I had forgotten sugar.

Jan definitely was surprised. But not much.

Tried all sorts of after-the-fact remedies, including honey. All to no avail. Ended up dumping my wonderful dessert into the garbage grinder. Haven't had the heart to try that dish again.

Sometimes I take directions too literally. When I worked in a cafeteria, the manager handed me a small salad to go and told me, "Plop a blob of salad dressing on this." I took the salad to the 5-gallon bucket of dressing and, using a large ladle, deposited a huge glunk of dressing atop the salad. When the manager saw what I had done, he didn't know whether to flip or go blind. He grabbed the salad from me, turned his back to the customer, and scraped off most of the dressing. Later he laughed about it. Sort of. And he never let me forget my culinary faux pas.

And speaking of food, I was a judge for chili cook-offs in Brookings. Had some fun and some good chili. Except for one dish that I'm telling you tasted like the guy had put bleach, cat spit and gasoline in it. I mean, it was vile. He didn't win, but he was so drunk that I'm not sure he knew it.

Last Saturday I was privileged to be a judge for the Blackberry Festival cooking contest. So I got to sample several blackberry items: coffee cake, pie and cheese cake. Because of my diet I took extremely tiny bites. (Right - now I'll sell you the $8 green bridge.)

Here are a few food phrases you can use.

*Say this to a waiter who brings stale rolls: Excuse me, but this is not well bred.

*Use this for a cup of bad coffee: Pardon me, but this provides grounds for a complaint.

*And finally, here's one for when you get a fine meal: Wow, what foods these morsels be.

Now excuse me, I'm going to make one of my current specialties: Toast.

'Roadless areas' From Jim Nolan Cave Junction

Many of the Illinois Valley residents may not be aware that one of the major reasons for letting the Biscuit Fire burn for several days was that much of the burn area was included in the disputed Inventoried Roadless Areas (IRAs).

These IRA designations are essentially defacto wildernesses managed by the USFS under the same guidelines as congressionally designated wilderness areas. In other words: "Let it burn."

Because of the USFS's lack of understanding or willingness to respond to the fire as they should have, we damn near lost the whole valley.

These so-called IRA's are really not roadless. For years now, the Siskiyou National Forest has been systematically decommissioning roads in the supposed roadless areas for many varied reasons, such as the prevent of the spread of Port Orford root fungus, noxious weeds and invasive species control.

The environmental groups, such as the Siskiyou Project, have been steering the USFS toward road closures in favor of other means of controlling the fungus and weed growth, because it serves two purposes: To reduce, in a small but ineffective way the spread of these maladies, but more important, to put pressure on the USFS to close the roads and de-inventory them.

Why are road closures so important to the Siskiyou Project and the USFS? Because Congress cannot declare an area as "wilderness" until there are no roads or the roads that are there have been removed or decommissioned.

It has become apparent to many that the "Clintonites" are still running the USFS. The USFS support of the IRAs is evidence that it plans to convert nearly 58.5-million acres nationwide of forest lands to wilderness. However, there is still some hope that this disastrous plan can be defeated.

On July 14, the state of Wyoming and the U.S. District Court agreed that the USFS is using the IRA designations as a club to illegally expand the wilderness areas across the American Continent.

The judge states very clearly how the Dept. of Agriculture (USFS) has overstepped its bounds and mandate. It is a relief to me to know that there are people in high places that understand what is at stake when rogue agencies try to assert their power in areas where they have no author-

Desire to learn leads to fine art

The Illinois Valley Fine Artists, Inc. announced Leslie J. Blanche as Featured Artist for August and September.

A Selma resident for the past two years, Blanche joined the artists soon after moving to the area. Blanche was born in San Diego, Calif. And has experience in computer-aided drafting.

For 14 years Blanche and her husband, Don, traveled on the water in a trawler. They had the opportunity to travel the East Coast seeing Maryland, and spending several years in Florida and several years in the Bahamas. They have family on the West Coast and settled in Illinois Valley.

The artist's desire to learn how to paint pictures led her to pursue likeminded individuals in the community and she discovered Illinois Valley Fine Artists group in September 2002 and says, "I came to the club one day with no experience, and with the exceptional guidance from the accomplished artists in our group,

Orange Peel May Stop Heartburn

WASHINGTON — Gastrointestinal (GI) problems like acid reflux, heartburn and ulcers may be eliminated with a new type of tablet. Scientists say that GI problems are not the result of excess acid, but the body' inability to deal with it. The tablet called Pepstat 380™ known as DGL that strengthens the body's natural defenses against acid Pepstat 380 goes to work immediately on stomach acid while addressing the cause of GI problems. Scientists say that the DGL in Pepstat 380 improves the body's protective substances, increases the lifespan of digestive tract cells, and improves blood supply to the area. Articles have appeared in publications like the British medical journal The Lancet showing DGL to be as effective as Zantac®, Tagamet® and/or antacids. This formula may make these drugs obsolete because DGL has no known side effects.

The problem with antacids and acid blockers is that they can interrupt the body's normal digestive process. Pepstat 380 is a natural alternative to antacids and acid blockers and is available at pharmacies without a prescription or call 1-800-339-3301. Available locally at:
