Court rules BPA treated fish fairly

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals has affirmed that the Bonneville Power Administration (BPA) provided equitable treatment to fish and wildlife while responding to the power crisis on the West Coast in 2001.

The decision marks the second time in recent weeks that the court has affirmed steps BPA took to manage through severe drought and market upheavals two years ago.

Two weeks ago the court upheld agreements between BPA and its industrial customers that reduced the amount of power BPA would sell these customers during the shortage.

In upholding BPA's actions, Judge J. Clifford Wallace quoted extensively from the agency's 2001 decision document, that demonstrated the scope of the actions taken by BPA to provide equitable treatment to fish.

RCC faculty sign contract for three years

Rogue Community College (RCC) faculty signed a three-year contract recently, agreeing to a one-year salary freeze that will save $350,000.

The agreement between the RCC Education Association (RCEA) and the college also sets the number of contract days in 2003-04 at 177, a reduction of five days.

The college had faced a $2.6 million revenue reduction in state funding over the next two years. An additional $1.2 million in Public Employees Retirement System (PERS) expenses also affected the college's budget.

To balance the budget, the college increased tuition and fees, reduced programs, personnel and expenditures, and obtained greater operating efficiencies. Managers' salaries were also frozen in 2003-04 and the classified employees' association agreed to a salary freeze.

The new contract gives all eligible faculty members a step increase in January 2004. It sets the top step of the salary schedule in '04-05 at the state average, between $61,300-$63,418 with 177 contract days. In '05-06, the intent is to continue the top step and number of contract days at the state average.

It also provides a new tiered-rate group health insurance plan, with RCC's premium share capped at six percent.
