

Measles via Europe still a concern

Oregon Dept. of Human Services (DHS) public health officials issued a second measles alert in connection with an infected European visitor who traveled to Portland on Aug. 26.

"Passengers who traveled on Lufthansa flight 468 from Frankfurt, arriving in Portland on Aug. 26, may have been exposed to measles," said Dr. Paul Cieslak, DHS communicable disease manager. "The person who had measles has since recovered and gone home, but was infectious at the time of travel."

Cieslak said Multnomah County Health Dept. promptly alerted people with whom the individual had contact with after arriving in Oregon, but were unable to contact the approximately 200 passengers on the flight.

Measles begins with a fever, cough, head cold, and eye irritation followed one to four days later by a rash, according to Cieslak.

Measles is a highly contagious viral infection that is transmitted through the air. It usually begins with a cough, runny nose, eye irritation and fever.

A red blotchy rash that begins on the face and spreads to the rest of the body follows these symptoms. Persons with measles can be contagious for several days before the rash appears and for up to four days afterward.

This is the second time measles has attracted attention in recent weeks; two international visitors to Oregon State University in Corvallis became ill with measles last month.

Most people with measles recover fully but it can be serious.

In the U.S. it kills around one out of every 500 persons who get it, according to Cieslak.
