Junction Inn sponsored fundraiser, raises $620

Edgar San Pascual, Junction Inn manager, Sharon Shankle, Junction Inn general manager and Kenny Hix (photo left) display a check from the first annual Junction Inn fundraiser to benefit the Illinois Valley Citizens Patrol (IVCP). The event, held at the Illinois Valley Golf Course in Cave Junction raised $620 for the IVCP.

Healthy hooves mean a happy horse

OSU offers practical information on managing small-acreage horse farms

Autumn brings rain, and rain brings mud, especially if you have horses on small acreage.

With horses on one to 10 acres, rain and mud can mean an unhealthy mess for horses and pasture.

And muddy pastures pollute streams, groundwater and household wells.

"Living in mud and manure is unhealthy for a horse," explained Garry Stephenson, Oregon State University Extension Service (OSU). "Mud harbors bacteria and fungal organisms that cause health problems," said Stephen-

Wet, muddy conditions can foster organisms that cause mud fever (scratches), cracking of the hoof and sole and related lameness. Insects breed in mud and manure.

With careful management, it is possible to keep a good grass cover through the winter, keep your weeds down and keep water clean and your horses healthy, said Stephenson.

"Managing Small - acreage Horse Farms," a new publication from the OSU Extension Service, spells out how to keep your small acreage horse pastures healthy, and at the same time protect horse health and water quality.

"Managing Smallacreage Horse Farms," EC 1558, provides 24-pages of "how-to" practical information to help horse owners keep their horses, pastures and water quality healthy and is available at OSU.

Send your request to Publication Orders, Extension and Station Communications, 422 Kerr Administration, Corvallis, OR 97331-2119, there is a fee. A preview is available at http://eesc.orgonstate.edu.
