Exchange

Like him, Wu has tried and enjoyed what comprises a new menu. "I had a burrito for the first time," she said, "and I like them. I also like other Mexican food; we don't have that where I come from."

But that's not all the exchange students have experienced.

"There's a lot of freedom here," commented Yoon, "almost too much." Added Kim, "In the classes here, the students talk louder than the teachers. In South Korea, students never speak louder than the teachers. It's disrespectful."

In another area, Kiahforst said, "In Germany there's a lot of American television, so it's a lot the same. But, I am surprised by how easy it is for people to get guns here. In Germany, it's very hard, and very few people have them. I like the fact that it's possible to get a driver's license at 16; and, oh yeah, I like football too."

All four students agree that they've been treated well here. "People just walk around with a big smile on their face," said Kiahforst. "They're very friendly."

Living with their hosts, the visitors become family members, including taking responsibility for some chores.

Foreign exchange students can choose how long they'd like to stay on a trip. Most exchange organizations offer various lengths of stay. For more information about such programs, students can contact their counselor. In addition, for information about summer trips as student ambassadors use; www.studentambassadors.org.
