Cave rave by visitors unanimous

THUBSDAY EVENING/LATE NIGHT

By SHANE WELSH Staff Writer

Visitor satisfaction is 100 percent at Oregon Caves National Monument, 20 miles east of Cave Junction.

And that's even based on data that most visitors go to the monument almost on the spur of the moment, while driving through Illinois Valley.

Officials from the monument met recently to discuss and compare results of a survey, conducted last year, of visitors to the monument.

"Each year, the National Park Service conducts a nationwide visitor survey to keep its Government Performance Results Objective (GPRO), a federal guideline established several years ago, to ensure parks operate in a more business-like fashion," said Craig Ackerman, superintendent at the monument for the National Parks Service.

"A random survey is handed out to 400 visitors at 388 national parks," he said. "Each park gets a score as to the overall satisfaction of visitors; Oregon Caves National Monument received a visitor satisfaction score of 100 percent," said Ackerman.

Last year, a separate survey was conducted at only 10 parks by the park service's Social Science Program at the Cooperative Park Studies Unit (CPSU) of the University of Idaho.

The survey is parkspecific. It was developed by input from staff at the caves. Data collected from the survey is designed to help determine local areas of interest to tourists and get feedback on what they liked or disliked about their visit; what attractions they visited most and why.

The survey was randomly given to 383 visitors from July 16 to 22, 2003, of which 338 were returned. On it were questions ranging from how they heard about the monument and what activities their group participated in, to how much money they spent and how they rated the quality of visitor services.

Of the data collected, the survey showed the main reason most tourists visit the caves is because they were driving through the area and decided to visit.

Eleven percent of those surveyed indicated they were on their way to Crater Lake National Park when they decided to visit the caves. Eighty percent said it was their first visit to the monument.

Average spending per capita was estimated at $41; just up from Crater Lake, which has an estimated $35 expenditure per capita.

The most-used services at the caves were the restrooms (95 percent) and park directional signs (85 percent).

Overall, the study indicated 96 percent of those who participated felt visitor services at the caves were "very good" or "good," with less than 1 percent rating services "poor."

Results of the survey will be made available online at www.nps.gov/ orca.
