July 6, 2003, writing in the 'New York Times', retired diplomat Joseph Wilson IV said that the Bush administration had sent him to Niger in 2002 to investigate the claim that Saddam Hussein had sought significant quantities of uranium for nuclear weapons from Africa, but that his conclusion that it was likely bogus apparently did not reach top officials ... July 7, 2003, an unattributed White House statement said the claim "should not have been included" in President Bush's State of the Union address.
