Atomic Age ushered in with a blast

By Oregon Dept. Of Veterans Affairs

In the predawn of July 16, 1945, an incredible event in a remote area of New Mexico forever changed the world.

The impressive and destructive powers of the atom were unleashed. And suddenly what had been proven in theory became reality.

The test of the first atomic bomb was the culmination of three years of planning and development within the top secret Manhattan Project formed in 1942 and headed by Gen. Leslie R. Groves. An isolated corner of the Alamogordo Bombing and Gunnery Range, 230 miles south of Los Alamos, N.M., was selected for the test that was given the code-name "Trinity."

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer directed the team, comprised of some of the greatest scientific minds of the time, headquartered at Los Alamos.

A steel tower was built in preparation for the test, which would suspend the bomb 100 feet above the ground. Many were apprehensive as to whether the bomb would be a dud, and others were concerned that the test might launch a catastrophic chain of events in the Earth's atmosphere. Still others feared the possible consequences of radioactive fallout.

The bomb designed for testing at Trinity Site involved two explosions. First was the conventional TNT explosion, followed by the nuclear explosion a fraction
