DMV change

documents except official passports.

*Photo of all applicants even if they're denied a driver license or ID card.

*Electronic imaging of all documents that customers present.

In Oregon, it's anticipated that the new requirements under the Real ID Act will not be in place until 2008. Several provisions of the act need federal rules to clarify details, and changes to Oregon laws won't be considered by the Legislature until 2007.

The Real ID Act also requires changes to DMV's back-office operations -- expansion of document storage capacity, verification of identity documents, and electronic sharing of driver data with other states,

Customers can start preparing to make their future visits to DMV more convenient by checking to see what forms of ID they have, other than their driver license, and making sure they qualify, such as a passport, said DMV.

Oregon's cost to implement the Real ID Act is not yet known.
