DEQ seeking 5+acre input

As of June 1, the Oregon Dept. of Environmental Quality (DEQ) is providing an opportunity for the public to comment on environmental plans and permit applications for new construction projects that disturb 5 acres or more.

The new public review process is part of changes OK'd in December by the Oregon Environmental Quality Commission for the 1200-C National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System general permit.

The 1200-C permit regulates stormwater runoff to surface waters from construction activities and is required only for those projects of 5 acres or more, said water quality officials from DEQ. It administers the permits with designated agents such as municipalities and special service districts.

For more information on the revised 1200-C permit, the public review process and requirements for permittees, visit www.deq.state.or.us/wq/permit/stormwaterhome.htm, scrolling down to the section on "Construction Activities." Fact sheets, permit application forms and permit guidance documents are available from this site.

Wireless security = props

How to install a wireless security system:

Go to a second-hand store and buy a pair of men's used work boots, a really big pair. Put them at your front door on top of a couple copies of "Guns and Ammo" magazine.

Put a dog dish -- a really big dish -- beside the boots and magazines.

Leave a note on your front door. It should read something like:

"Bubba, Crazy Larry, Big Mike and I have gone to get more ammunition and liquor. We'll be back in half an hour. Don't disturb the pit bulls. They've just been dewormed and they are a little edgy."

128 mph speeder halted

A Klamath Falls man was stopped and cited Thursday afternoon, June 15 on a charge of exceeding the speed limit and driving more than 100 mph (128 mph in a 55 mph zone), said Oregon State Police (OSP).

Driving a 2003 Honda, the motorcyclist was identified as Rion L. Dillon, 27. He was on Hwy. 97 north of the Algoma Bridge construction zone.

Effective Jan. 1, a new Oregon law (Senate Bill 568) stiffened penalties for drivers cited at speeds 100 mph and faster. A conviction carries a mandatory minimum 30-90 day license suspension and a $1,103 fine.

Excessive speed is a factor in half of all traffic fatalities, and it is the only factor in approximately 30 percent of these crashes, said OSP.

During 2005, data provided by OSP Patrol Services Division indicates that troopers cited 464 people for driving 100 mph or faster. Between 2000 and 2004, troopers cited more than 2,600 drivers for going 100 mph or faster.

Of the citations issued to drivers in excess of 100 mph on a secondary state highway, more than a quarter (21) occurred on Hwy. 97. Of those issued on 97, half were issued north of Klamath Falls to the Hwy. 58 junction, OSP noted.

Vehicle fires can be prevented

Car fires account for 13 percent of all civilian fire deaths, according to the National Fire Protection Association.

More than two-thirds of vehicle fires result from mechanical or electrical failures or malfunctions. To reduce the risk of vehicle fire, AAA is urging drivers to get a comprehensive vehicle maintenance inspection if they have not had one during the past year.

Drivers also should be alert to damaged wiring and loose electrical connections, worn or blistered fluid lines, leaking connections, severely worn brake components and damaged heat shields.
