Lovejoy Hospice

In an effort to help you to be better informed about hospice care in our community, Lovejoy Hospice produces an informative question and answer column each month. Look for our column printed on the fourth Wednesday edition of the 'Illinois Valley News.'

Q: What should I say to the children of my relative who is dying? I want to protect them.

A: It is natural to wish to protect children. And the death of a loved one is a very important, challenging and life-changing time for a child of any age.

Children have different levels of ability to understand death depending on their age and stage of development. Provide support, affection, and reassurance. Listen to how they feel. Allow their tears. Keep some normal routines and structure. Be aware that irritability and changes in behaviors can be signs of their fears and grief. Use those as an opportunity to love the child and to ask questions about how they feel. As adults, we often learn much from the wisdom of what children say about death. Helping a child create music, art, writing, or memory boxes of their dying parent can create a legacy. Make recordings. Involve faith or spiritual support of their choice.

Children take their cues from adults, so awareness of our behaviors around them is important. We can help children learn to cry, share, hug, grieve, love, remember, and even laugh a little.

To learn more, you can look online at www.hospicenet.org for a section titled "Children's Understanding of Death."

If you believe the child is excessively withdrawn or angry, please contact a physician or knowledgeable counselor.

Your local hospice organization can help the patient, family, and child. And ask them about their childhood grief specialists and programs.
