Result ‘well-done’ for barbecue brouhaha

By SCOTT JORGENSEN
IVN Staff Writer

Valley Evangelical Free Church youth pastor Sonny Moore decided to have a barbecue fund-raiser during the Illinois Valley Chamber of Commerce Concerts in the Park series.

He thought that he had all the required paperwork, and set up shop for the June 14 concert in Jubilee Park.

However, the city disagreed, and ordered him to stop immediately.

In a June 19 letter, City Recorder Jim Polk took Moore to task for failing to obtain the city's permission for the barbecue.

"It has come to the attention of the City of Cave Junction that you are conducting business inside the city limits without a business license," Polk wrote. "You are required to cease this activity immediately or to obtain the necessary authorization and licensing from the City, Josephine County and State of Oregon (as required) prior to engaging in any future activity."

During a telephone interview, Moore said that he wasn't expecting the city to react in such a manner.

"I was a bit surprised, to say the least," Moore said. "I think the letter was definitely over the top and premature. It could have been a simple phone call or a simple letter saying, 'Can we get clarification on what you're doing?'"

Polk said that the city was responding to a complaint it received.

"It was reported to me that somebody was taking up the handicapped accessible picnic area and selling things at the park and wasn't licensed," Polk said. The name of the complainant was not revealed.

Moore said that the chamber of commerce, for which his mother is office manager, had asked him to conduct the fund-raiser. The intent, besides raising money for the youth group, was to make food available during the Thursday 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. al fresco, free concerts for the community.

The chamber had permission to sponsor and sanction the Concerts in the Park series. But Polk said that food sales were not included in the agreement.

"All that the chamber asked for was to rent the 'amphitheater' and use sound," Polk said. "They didn't say anything about selling food."

Seeking to resolve the issue, Moore appeared during the Cave Junction City Council's Monday night, June 25 meeting in city hall.

Moore told the councilors that he had a letter from the chamber requesting that he be allowed to continue vending during the concert series. He promised to set up outside the handicapped area and park only in designated areas. He added that he has a food handler's permit.

That was good enough for the council, which voted 3-0 to grant Moore permission to continue the fund-raiser. Mayor Tony Paulson and councilors Margaret Miller and Russell Ehrman voted in favor. Councilors Dan Fiske and Lynne Atteberry were absent.

The council also voted unanimously to allow Farmers Insurance Agent Irene Guerrero-Acevedo to operate her business from her Palmer Street residence.

Acevedo said that she will move the home's garage to the rear of the lot to make room for additional parking spaces. She promised to pave the approach to the property.

The council unanimously voted to adopt its supplemental budget for the 2006-07 fiscal year, as well as the budget for the 2007-08 fiscal year.

In another matter, a settlement offer was made to James Huguley, an Alaska resident who owns property at 126 Caves Hwy.

Huguley's property had incurred an abatement judgment of $155,500, including approximately $4,000 in legal and administrative costs to the city. The city had offered to settle the judgment for 10-cents on the dollar, for a total of $15,500. Huguley's attorney, Bill Ransom, made a counter-offer of $9,000.

Miller moved to offer a judgment settlement of $12,000. That motion passed 2-1 with the mayor -- seeking $15,000 -- voting "No."

The council also held a public hearing on an ordinance to establish the position of code enforcement officer for the city. A second reading ordinance is scheduled for the council's Monday, July 9 meeting.
