Young R-C pilot earns wings handily

Since 1976 The Rogue Valley Flyers have encouraged young people to become familiar with aviation and enjoy the satisfaction of piloting their own radio-controlled aircraft.

During its recent monthly meeting, club members gave a large round of applause and congratulated

Dylan Krehbiel on his successful solo flight of an aircraft at the Josephine County Skypark in Kerby. He is the son of Melissa Krehbiel.

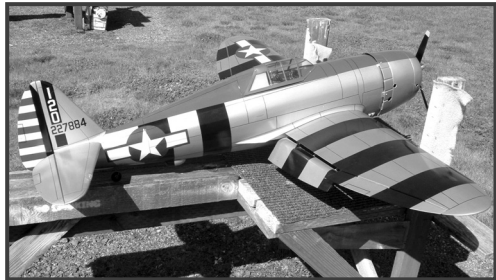

During the past three months this young student, who lives in Grants Pass and just celebrated his 13th birthday, had worked toward that day. Under the mentoring of club member Jack Schafer, Dylan assembled his aircraft from a kit.

Said Art Kelly, club president, “Through this process he gained understanding about the principles of flight, the need for attention to detail and the safety protocols associated with this sport.

“The reward of successful participation in the club’s youth program is an airplane, engine and associated radio gear. In presenting this gift to Dylan, Schafer announced that in his 30 years of flying radio-controlled aircraft and instructing new pilots, he has never found anyone who picked up the skills as quickly as this student.”

Rogue Valley Flyers will hold its 19th annual free Float & Fly at Lake Selmac on the weekend of July 12 and 13.

Heartland productions styles include classical ballet, modern dance, jazz, and tap set to a wide variety of music.

Patricia Wilson, director and dance instructor of Heartland Dance, has chosen the music and costumes; then combined them with her own choreography. Cave Junction resident Clyde Highbarger has lent his technical expertise in helping design the lighting and sound, while Hannalisa Johnson, Laurel Highbarger, and Brent Kehoe each have choreographed a dance.

Nancy Gordon, founder of Heartland, has written just enough narration to help younger audience members follow the story, as well as add a little humor and whimsy to the show. She is also a dance instructor at Heartland and is co-directing, as well as contributing some choreography.

Cinderella features Julianne Shepard as “Cinderella,” and Brent Kehoe as the prince.

Laurel Highbarger, Deanna Fish, and Christopher Highbarger will appear as the stepsisters, while Ruth Highbarger will dance the part of the stepmother.
