Summer reading program wraps up

By Jenna Larkin
IVN Contributing Writer

On Saturday, August 2, the Illinois Valley Library ended their summer reading program with a big blowout party. The summer reading program ran from June 21 to August 2. This year's theme was "Fizz, Boom, Read!" to encourage kids to get involved with science and reading.

The program had plenty of activities and games to involve children and parents. There was storytelling for the younger children, craft projects for all ages and reading bingo, along with science related projects that the kids were able to take home. Parents even had the chance to get rewarded for participating with their kids. Each week that parents came in with their kids, they were entered into a drawing for a chance to win a $100 gift card to Fred Myers. Teens were also encouraged to participate in the reading program with a chance to win a $50 gift card to Oregon Books and Games for each week they came in and turned in their reading log.

Many of the participants of the reading program turned in their reading logs on Saturday and were rewarded with prizes and a certificate for completing the program. The reading logs will all be tallied and an overall winner of who read the most books will be announced.

The kids and their parents spent the afternoon at the library lounging outside eating popsicles and participating in a steam punk art project, provided by the Illinois River Valley Arts Council (IRVAC). Along with the reading program, each week there was a different science theme and a project emphasizing the topic, while keeping kids enthusiastic about reading and providing them something to do during the summer. For example, a member from IRVAC came to the library every Saturday throughout the summer reading program and did an art project with the kids and their parents.

"We want to make sure the kids are still engaged and still using their brains. It's really easy to get lazy during the summer," said head librarian Roberta Lee.

The summer reading program is geared towards children of all ages. If a child is not quite old enough to read by themselves, parents are encouraged to read to them, allowing that child to still earn the same prizes as an older child who can read by themselves. Many kids that participate in the summer reading program started by having their parents read to them. Many of those kids are now reading by themselves and return every year to join the program.

At the beginning of the summer break, kids and parents sign up for the summer reading program. Kids are given a reading log to enter the books they have read. Each week the children can bring the reading log to the library and earn prizes for books that they have read. Not only are the reading logs meant to keep track of how many books a child has read for the reading program, it's a good way for parents and kids to see how much they improve year after year.

"We've had really good involvement with the community. I've been really excited to have parents and kids getting involved," said Lee.
