1000 Tons of Blue Granite from Haines Quarry to Become Castle Wall

Semis loaded with huge rocks from the Haines Quarry are being taken to Portland and will be part of a castle wall at the Japanese Garden in Washington Park. The Grand Opening for the Park is scheduled for Spring 2017. An extensive article appeared on Oregon Live.

According to the Oregon Live article written by Janet Eastman, "A 22-foot-tall, Japanese-style castle wall built of Oregon granite will partially enclose the village. A courtyard will be used as a gathering spot and for activities, performances and demonstrations."

"There was a deep search to find the hard stones for the 140-foot-long, heavy castle wall, according to garden spokeswoman Claire Foster."

"Oregon is rich in basalt, a type of lava-derived rock which can have an irregular grain and is considered too fragile for larger projects like the Castle Wall, as it might crumble under the wall's weight," she says.

"The rare source for granite in Oregon is outside Baker City, so garden curator Sadafumi Uchiyama visited a privately managed quarry that has been closed for a century. It was reopened for this special project."

"Several trips to this quarry yielded 1,000 tons of what's known as Baker City Blue granite, which was named for its fine grain and a slight blue tint," says Foster.

"Rough-hewn blocks of granite were selected by Uchiyama and Suminori Awata, a 15th-generation master stone mason from Japan."

"Awata and master masons Matt Driscoll of O'Driscoll Stone and Kyle Schlagenhauf of Green Man Builders will employ the centuries-old ano-zumi technique to construct the curving wall. Instead of mortar, smaller ballast stones will be carefully fitted to join larger foundation stones."

A big thank you to the Mutual Improvement Club which has faithfully made popcorn balls for years for the school program. They did so again this year.

with Krista Dennis

You may have seen a direct mailing from the USPS in your mail box recently. The Post Office is promoting a new smartphone app that will allow users to take pictures of family and friends alongside Charlie Brown and other "Peanuts" characters. Here is how it works...after downloading the app to your device, use the app to scan a USPS blue collection box to see the characters appear on the screen. When someone stands next to the box, they will be surrounded by the characters. You can then snap a photo and share on social media. This holiday-themed app will also allow users to create other "augmented reality" experiences, including seeing planes fly around a Christmas Tree. You can also order stamps, boxes and schedule pickups. Sounds like a lot of fun to me!
