SPELLING BEES TO IMPROVE ORTHOGRAPHY

Believing that poor spelling is the worst drawback in the otherwise good public education, County Superintendent Moore is planning to improve the orthography of the children of Lane county. To do this he will inaugurate a series of five old-fashioned "spelling bees" in each school, the whole series terminating in an elimination contest for the championship of the county.

For this final contest the best speller from each grade of every school in the county will be designated as a delegate and will go to Eugene to contest for prizes for his grade. The prizes will be gold coins.

Superintendent Moore says that about 75 per cent of the failures in the eighth grade examinations and for teachers' certificates, are due to poor spelling, and he thinks that in the business world there is no other single educational system flaw that stands out so prominently as poor spelling. He hopes to make the interest in the coming contest so great that every pupil in the public schools will make spelling the principal study in his course.

He will call on the people of Eugene this week for contributions for the cash prizes to be offered to the best spellers, and he hopes to secure a large sum to insure prizes of such value as will enlist the attention of every boy and girl.
