"Guided" Points.

BY JOHN P. GUILD.

As straws show which way the wind blows,
So words show which way the thought goes.

The way of the transgressor is hard—unless he is crossing a bog.

Most people point out the perils of the road and the difficulties of its ascent, not so much as a caution to intending travellers as an excuse for not proceeding themselves.

If you have not ambition enough to start or to help an enterprise, don't try to discourage those who have. If you are too weak or too lazy to lift, then whistle and cheer the toilers.

Martyrdom for the sake of martyrdom is a serious mistake; but martyrdom as a consequence of doing one's duty is a glorious success.

"No matter if I am small if I am sound," the little hard apple said to the big rotten one.

A little school that teaches a few great truths is better than a great college that imparts many lies.

"Any religion is better than no religion," is a common remark, which should be answered by asking: "Is a bad egg better than no egg?" or, "Is false coin better than no coin?"

A rogue is no better for being a dude, and a cheat is no better for being pious.

Polish may give a glow to a spoon, but it will not harm true worth, but rather will help it pass where otherwise only specious glint will be taken for solid gold.

Everything is good in its place.
Mud is dirt out of place. Mud is not to be avoided by not knowing it, but by knowing that it is to be avoided.

Don't be so much afraid of thinking too much of yourself as you are of thinking too small of other selves.

Think much of yourself. Those who do not think much of themselves do not amount to much.

Be good; but don't be too good for anything, be good for something.

The only good religion is the religion of doing good.

Abandoned farms are easier reclaimed than are abandoned farmers.

Go west, thou eastern young man and young woman, and grow up in the Liberal University.

A little learning is better than none, but all you can get is not too much.

Only those cry out against knowledge who are too stupid or too lazy to get it, or too mean to want others to have any.
