Life is more important when you are having fun.

Dr. Karkeys

We were guardedly welcomed by an enclave of Buddhist survivalists. They temper their cellular-level meditations with occasional forays into a near town to eat Cantonese food and listen to Country-Western bands, believing that that music is the equivalent of blues for pink and beige people, and an important cultural barometer.

Later, we heard the choruses of these songs sung like mantras by single files of men and women as they left the hidden camp for places unknown. Days later when a group reappeared, they would sing the same chorus, but with variations: light Celtic grace notes, or forcibly extended parallel harmonies, or some odd twist that would make you smile, or dizzy. We slowly realized that the singers could actually induce fits of giggling, or vertigo, or blurred vision without affecting themselves.

Luckily, our group response to wierdness was to listen to whomever seemed to have a handle on whatever strange activity we might be witnessing. In this mode we were after Multiple Independent Sensing and Cognition, so when some Gregorian guirillas snaked down the trail with a swing baritone line, someone whispered to focus on the ascending line and ignore the counterpoint. We tried it and found that by concentrating on one part, we could avoid being swallowed by the whole and carted off in a fit of hysterical laughter.

Now, folks, this outtake from somewhere else in the space-time continuum refers to the value of individual perception and the power of song, but also to the idea that we can all listen in more than one way.

Sometimes there is so much going on that it is dangerous to focus on any one thing. Other times we can allow ourselves to be immersed in the sound of a flute, or a chamber orchestra, or, more importantly, the voice of someone we love.

Hon. J.E. "Bud" Clark, retiring Mayor of Portland, Or.

BEHIND THE TIMES

Mike Burgess

Aside from the fact we're both air breathers, George Bush and I have only one thing in common. We both pitch horseshoes.

No, silly, not together.

I mention this to almost everyone I manage to drag to the pits in the park across the street.

"This is the only thing I have in common with George Bush," I say. "Except we're both air breathers."

My delivery's gotten pretty good.

No, I'm not going to sit here and tell you I spend a lot of time thinking about George Bush. Or his dirty little dream of becoming Master of the Universe and bombing the parts he doesn't like into submission.

I don't. Especially not when I'm pitching shoes.

As anyone old enough to remember the rain forest will tell you, there's something about the feel of a horseshoe in your hand, and the sound it makes when it rings the stake, that makes grinding your teeth over liars, thieves, and pompous nitwits more trouble than it's worth.

BASEBALL

In 1993, next year, the Chicago Cubs will never again be found in the cellar of the National League East!!

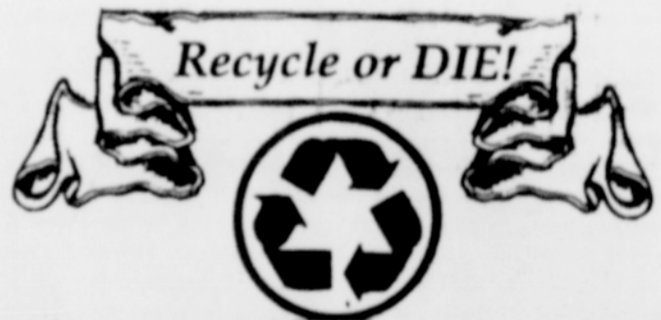

First lights, then this.

Will the suffering never end? The cellar is the cellar but in the National League "west" it's the basement with a family room..
