SURFING WITH THE GREAT WHITE SHARK
by Kenny Doudt
reviewed by Emily von Hinckley

There was a morning last October when the cove was working as perfect as it ever has in the past few years. Dawn patrol and I was hopping to get into my wetsuit, into the water. Even though it was still dark, couldn't even see the waves...but we all knew, we all knew.

Guess I was fourth in; Hot Toodie and Little Bob were already in. Joe Roper and then me. All the Point guys were out that day, 'cause hey, they don't get to surf a right hardly ever out there. The sun was just a glow over the east hills. I caught a wave, small, yet I paddled in, planed, dropped in, popped up, actually did a nice bottom turn. Next wave I hooked into was so effortless I was able to smile fiendishly at the Hassler. I watched beautiful waves, I watched surfers glide, speed, laugh and hoot, turn and kick out with a grace, a style, a certain finesse I have not yet reached.

Next wave I paddled for, corner of my eye, saw a power paddler coming from Shilo; since we seemed to be at the peak, I figured he'd go left, I'd go right, but NO. He snakes my little wave and as he cuts past me, turns and bellows, "Hey!" I'm shaking, that was the Predator. So, now I hang on the shoulder.

I'm a beginning surfer. I borrowed a wetsuit from a friend who had been bitten by a Great White. Suit full of punctures, a tad bit chilly in the Pacific, but I figure this; what are the odds of a shark biting into the same suit twice? I am superstitious, never eat tuna sannies the same day I go out. If I ever have a shark dream, I think long before I suit up. Sometimes I don't even go, yet I'm hooked. The sedation of floating in a wonderful but illusory world of no worries, no pain, no apprehension...that is my wave.

So when I finally met Kenny Doudt, I'd heard so many different versions of the infamous Haystack Rock shark attack... There he was at the Cove, selling me his book. I'm really new to this world of surf, surf, and only surf. Many of the people in the book are legends, faces; maybe I know them by the board they ride, probably the car they drive. Kenny's book reads like a movie. I was surfing alongside him, I was in the ambulance. This is a painful book, but is reality. Kenny died, but listen to this: he surfed two months later and taught his precious sons to surf.

You may have a daughter, a husband, a son or aunt who surfs. Don't let this book scare you. Kenny is an inspiration. That is the power of the ocean. This is what Kenny said to me the other day..."You have just got to live. There is no other way."

By the way...IF YOU DON'T SURF NOW, DON'T START.
