landed in our facility she had a sexually transmitted disease and a loud, oversexed, childlike demeanor bordering on mild retardation.

She passed the caged hours listening to the radio in her room, singing at the top of her lungs in an off-key wail, like an abandoned child. The song about "forgiveness" was her favorite.

She stayed with us for several months, mainly because the courts and the Child Protective Services couldn't figure out what else to do with her.

When the Youth Center staff discussed Candy, it was to roll their eyes and anxiously ponder the variables involved in how long she would remain in our charge. The fervent wish was for her speedy transfer to anywhere else.

Is the connection between the two stories, Candy and the would-be Abortion Vigilant, as maddening to you as it is to me? I have to ask the question, or rather it asks itself; why do so many people find it comfortable and righteous to love the intangible, the ethereal aspect of human life with so little compassion and acceptance for everyday, complicated, half grown reality?

This is not an original point, yet it fairly screams itself as an analogy of our culture.

Elegy

The tabor and the thumbbones roll like rattles on the earth
for you, for me--

for you have gone away
with the suddenness of tragedy,
a Labor Day fatality.

We're born with death pressed up inside our skin like vertebrae.
We slink along to private threnodies, and the tabor and the thumbbones

roll like rattles on the earth
for you, for me --

it got you suddenly.
My own march moves sedately to the beat of wrinkling skin and the banality of allergies.

Sometimes I think the only way to ease the terror of mortality is in the free acceptance and even freer gift of pleasure.

In that you were masterly.

You took all you were given and you gave everything you had to give:
the aesthetic of your spine,

your eyes, your ears, your little feet,
and the curve of you asleep
in the most humorous of places.

In these unnegotiated offerings lies the meaning of it all;
they turn whimpers into melodies that set us dancing in a lightening dark, to the tabor and the thumbbones that roll like rattles on the earth.
