WILDLIFE ON THE EDGE
A MURDER OF CROWS
 Crows are Crows all over the world.
 An extremely tough, hardy species, Crows have adapted to Man and most other factors without batting an eye.
 They travel in packs and look out for one another. Scavenging and cawing their way around their chosen neighborhood. After a rainfall they can be seen on lawns and parking lots chasing down homeless worms, and their arrivals and departures can be as silent as fog - one minute you see a crowd of black packing and fidgeting away; blink, and it's as if they were never there. Then, one by one, they appear again from their invisible roosts in the dark trees. A sentinel always stands guard and it is impossible to sneak up on a crow. They are seen when they want to be and if they don't, you won't know it. Crows are one of the most intelligent birds we can hope to know - it has been said that if men wore feathers and wings, very few of us would be clever enough to be Crows.
