WILDLIFE ON THE EDGE

May 1994

The back yard has for months been carpeted with beautiful bobbing Bluebells. Most of them are, as you might expect, blue - a deep sky blue - but there is also a strong standing among the white and pink contig ney. Bluebells are a well-loved, classic flower, common in many parts of the world.

A bird called the Lesser Goldfinch is probably among the crowd at the bird feeder. They have a yellow-green body and the males wear little black hats. Our neighboring state of Washington holds this bird in high esteem.

Tree Frogs are probably the source of the late night creaking from the nearby swamps. This is their season to reproduce, and the frogs are in a frenzy to get their time in. These are one of the most common species of frog in the region, and they plan to stay that way. Next Month: The Spawn
