If I owned the Zoo
by Josh

I would get a Giraffe-elephant.
It's an elephant that has a long neck and a long tail.
He lives at my Zoo; with lions that have ten legs. And birds that have more birds on their heads.

The Western consciousness has always asked for freedom: the human mind was born free, or at any rate born to be free, but everywhere it is in chains; and now at the end of its tether.
- Norman O. Brown

Poem

Life is short but our desires are many,
And all mankind finds joy in living long.
When day and month reach this auspicious time
Everyone rejoices in its name.

The dew is chill, the summer wind has ceased,
The air is clear and all the sky is bright.
No trace remains of departed swallows,
The honking still echoes from passing geese.
Wine serves to exorcise all our concerns,
Chrysanthemum keeps us from growing old.

But what is the thatched-hut gentleman to do
Who helpless views time's revolutions?
The dusty cup shames the empty wine cask,
The cold lower blooms uncelebrated.

Drawing tight my robe, I sing to myself,
In my reverie deepest feelings stir.
There are many joys in living here,
And just to see it through is something gained.
