Cheryl

By Elizabeth Stansberry

Gentle, porcelain girl,
With a sweetness uncertain,
Her smile, half-crooked
Shines through the trees
I see her laughing
By the lake, cold
And misty blue,
And I want to run to her
I see the puzzle pieces
Of her life
Scattered before me
A safety pin,
A wedding ring,
A bright pink dress,
A treehouse made for one,
An unfinished coloring book,
A journal that has never been written in,
And the term paper marked with an A,
I link the puzzle together,
And I see only a porcelain angel,
Standing there,
A mystical creature
living a child's life,
I see her
Floating there,
Half-lingering between dust and rain,
I sense her greatness,
With soles made of moonlight,
Her slight voice glides
Through the air,
And sets hearts on fire,
Cheryl, the shy,
Cheryl, the scared,
Cheryl, the true,
Her eyes shine amber-gold,
And her love washes over me,
I see her now,
Dancing in the sun,
Bathed in powder blue sky,
Draped in gold and silver,
For she is the ever-lasting,
She is the Queen of all
Glow-in-the-dark hearts
