A salute to Pride

PHOTO BY MICHELE HUNT

Street Roots vendors, staff, volunteers and friends donned rainbows and ribbons to march in the 2015 Portland Pride Parade, celebrating diversity, education and development in the LGBTQ communities. Portland's pride festival and parade happen every June to commemorate the Stonewall Riots in New York. This year, it brought together more than 200 community organizations, businesses and vendors to celebrate Pride over the June 12 weekend. The event is produced by Pride Northwest.

that climate change doesn't exist? How loving is it of us if 300 million people stand to lose the land they live on due to sea level rise during the next 100 years and we do nothing about that? I think we all know the answer to those questions.

E.G.: About a year ago, Time magazine named you as one of the 100 Most Influential People in the World. Do you feel like you are one of the most influential people?

K.H.: (laughs) No, are you kidding! When I got the email from Time magazine last April, my family had the worst case of the stomach flu I have ever seen in my entire life. For days, all I had been doing was cleaning up unspeakable things. It was awful. So in the middle of these days, I was sitting down at the kitchen table just for a second to try and check my email, in vomit-splattered jeans, having barely slept for three days, and I get this email saying, "Congratulations. You're one of the most influential people in the world," and I think, "That's got to be spam," and I delete it. Fast-forward a week, everybody had recovered and I'd washed my jeans and I went back to the university to work, and I check my mailbox for the first time, and there is this very formal card asking me to attend the Time gala event, and I thought, "Oh my goodness! Is this real?"

E.G.: What do you wish people would ask you when they interview you that they don't?

K.H.: One of the most important things I wish everyone knew was that we don't have to be a super green person to act on climate.

We often assume that if we are already a person who hugs trees, who eats granola, who bikes to work, then we have the values and we have the lifestyle we need. But for the rest of us, even if we agree with the science, even if we think it's a problem, we feel as if we just don't have the values, it's not on our priority list and there isn't much we can really do about it. I think that is one of the most pervasive and harmful myths that most of us have bought into today.

I'm convinced that nearly every single one of us already have the values we need to care about climate change. If we live on this planet and we have not signed up for the trip to Mars that 100 crazy people have apparently signed up for, then this is the only planet we have. It just makes sense for all of us to want this to be a good home for ourselves and for our children, no matter what religion, political party or country we come from.
