TWELVE YEARS IN HIDING.

G. A. Bennett at Last Arrested for Extensive Cattle Stealing.

Missoula, Mont., Jan. 29.—G. A. Bennett, formerly a prominent merchant of this city, who for the past 12 years has been hiding from an indictment of a grand jury issued October 12, 1890, on a charge of stealing cattle, was brought last night to Missoula by the sheriff.

The story of his downfall, so far as can be learned, is that stockmen, in the summer of 1890, had been missing cattle, and suspicion fell on Bennett and his range riders. A close watch was kept on them with the result that evidence against Bennett, which was considered sufficient by that official to warrant his calling a grand jury to investigate the matter. After a session lasting several days, the grand jury returned a verdict against Bennett and four others, charging them with stealing cattle.

Bennett drove from his home directly through this city to some unknown point on the Northern Pacific, where dressed in woman's garb, he made his escape. The various sheriffs of this county since the escape have constantly been on the lookout for him. Some weeks ago the sheriff located his man at Albuquerque, N. M., and quietly left the city for the south with all the necessary papers for his arrest and return here.

At the time the affair became public Bennett was operating a slaughter house and in searching the place, the grand jury found upwards of 100 cattle hides bearing the brands of several Bitter Root stockmen hid in the river and buried in the ground in that vicinity.

Standing upon a mound near her, she placed her hands to her pretty mouth, and with a simple eloquence that cannot be too highly commended, cried "Hi!" to him, at the top of her fresh young voice.

Whether the breeze has played traitor, or whether the bending figure is of so gross material as to be dead to this brilliant appeal, who can say. At all events, he never stirs or lifts himself from his place, whatever it may be. Nothing daunted, Griselda returns to the attack.

"Hi!" cries she again, with a sharper, freer intonation. And still nothing comes of it. The bending figure refuses to straighten his back, and things remain as they are. He is really too dead. Getting down from her mound she clambers up on a higher bank, and once more sends out her voice upon the world:

"Hi, my good man!" This does it. As if compelled to acknowledge this tribute to his virtues, "my good man" appears himself, looks vaguely round him at every point but the right one first, and then at Griselda. The effect produced is other than from her longings. Down goes his rod, his cast, his choicest fish—an admirable orange-grout—and he comes steaming toward her at about twenty knots an hour.

His eyes, ever since they first lighted upon Griselda, have seemed to grow to her, and now, as he draws nearer, she can see the change in his face. The knowledge that she is smiling at him, and she very nearly falls off her high bank, and then grows very charmingly rosy, and as charmingly confused. It is none other than the young man who had helped to restore the carriage to its legitimate position.

"It is really you!" cries he, with unaffected delight, coloring warmly. "It is you!" replies she, reflectively, and as though it is a little unfair to think of all the personalities at her. "So it is you!" she smiles, saying, "You wanted me? I hope you had not to call often?"

"Very often," smiling, too, and jumping down off her pedestal. "I thought I should never see you here. Do you know the road to Greycourt? I don't."

"I do. It is a tedious way, and complicated. But if you will permit me to go with you and show it to you, Miss Dysart?"

"Oh, no. No, indeed. It is giving you quite too much trouble, and how do you know my name?" asks she, with a shy smile, and her hand to her forehead.

"I asked somebody in the village, who guesses he, honestly, 'and he told me you were Mr. Dysart's niece. You don't mind that, do you?'"

"No, no, heard of you," she says, "but then I didn't take for granted everything that was told me."

"What did you hear of me?"

"That you were a good man. I was from Lunnon town, and full of tricks as an egg's full of mate," replies she, demurely, evidently quoting somebody, and with a glance so full of tricks on her own count that she laughs in spite of herself.

"Well," says he, "I'm not from Lunnon town, certainly, and I hope I'm not as great a trickster as my fellows. As to my tricks, I don't know of any. If I'm not from Lunnon, from where?"

"Rather close to you. My sister lives just over the border of this county, a matter of two miles off, and I spend most of my time with her."

"It was a very good thing for my sister and me that you came fish, as," says Griselda, "for I suppose we should both be now either dead or dying. Here she looks round her. 'Have we very much further to go?'"

"About a mile."
