The blustry month of March has been keeping up its reputation this year. There has already been several quite windy days this month.

Dayton is only 32 miles from the metropolis of Oregon—Portland. It is surrounded by a fine agricultural country, and has good shipping facilities by boat and rail.

Last Saturday, there was a change in the weather. It again got around to the average Western Oregon winter weather. Rain commenced falling, and Oregon was itself.

There is a probability that Dayton will soon have a City Marshal who will be paid a stated salary, and who will have the support of business men, and citizens generally, in the performance of his duty as marshal, in enforcing law and order.

A HEALTHY COUNTRY.

The immediate section of country surrounding Dayton possesses all the sanitary advantages and elements conducive to good health. No better evidence could be required in confirmation of the above statement, than is found in the great exodus of doctors from Dayton. It is an old saying, "The doctor thrives in locailties infected by poisonous germs, where all manner of aches and pains appear at each change of the moon." But this proverbial language is not applicable to Dayton.

Dr. Hamilton departed the early part of week before last to a section of country much less fortunate than this vicinity, where he may find patients waiting to be cured. Dr. DeLong is now arranging his affairs to remove to pastures new, where he will find a greater number of patients and more lucrative practice. Our old time friend. Dr. G. E. Stuart contemplates an early removal to Eastern Oregon. Dr. Rossiter has advertised to sell his household goods, preparatory to moving to Portland to reside. The above mentioned are all well known gentlemen in this community, and two latter have practiced their profession here for many years. We regret to loose these gentlemen from our community, but other fields are more inviting for their labors than can possibly be offered in this community. There are still several doctors remaing here, and more unfledged expecting soon to receive diplomas.

In this connection I'll relate a little story—it not, however, having any connection with the above. At one of the old fashioned camp meetings in the East, the following little story was told. "On the occasion of a big meeting, all the fowls of the neighborhood suffered death on a common chopping block, except one poor old turkey, which was too poor to enter the ministry. After the meeting was over the old turkey came out and looked upon the fallen heads of his former associates lying on the ground. Ruminating, he exclaimed, 'here lies the many heads of cousins chicken, and brothers turkey. They have all fought a good fight; they have served a noble profession; they have all entered the ministry, and here I am left alone, the only survivor of this awful slaughter. But I find consolation in the following quotation from Scripture': 'Blessed are the poor for they shall inherit the earth.'" DAYTON.

DAYLIGHT BURGLARY.—Monday last while J. G. Lewis, manager of the Dayton Racket store was at his dinner, the store was entered and money taken from the store to the amount of near $10, from the till. When Mr. Lewis left the store at noon to go to dinner—his home being several blocks from the store—he locked the store door, and had only gone as far as the livery barn, when Rev. J. Waggoner, who was on his way home, stopped at the store and was about to enter when he found that the door was locked, and looking up street saw Lewis on his way to dinner, and he then went to his home. Soon after R. L. Harris having some express matter he wished attended to, stopped across the street from his store to Lewis' and finding the door of store locked went to his dinner. Afterwards Chas Woolworth went to Lewis' store and found the door unlocked and went into the store, but finding no one there went into Londenchausen's shoe shop adjoining, and inquired for Lewis. About that time Mr. Harris returned from dinner, and wishing to have his express matter attended to, again went to the Racket. Finding the door unlocked, he supposed Lewis had returned, and entered the room, but not finding Lewis there he went through the store to the back, and found the rear door open; returning to the front of the building, he also went into the shoe shop and made inquiries as to Lewis. Finding Mr. L had not got returned from dinner he declared that something was wrong, as the door of the Racket was locked when he went to dinner and now all the doors were unlocked. At this juncture Mr. Lewis was seen returning from dinner. When he arrived at the store and had made an examination he found that the store had been robbed of the above mentioned sum of money. In the Express Office everything was found to be all right.
