CITY'S LURE STILL STRONG
Movement From Rural Districts Declared to Be Menace to Welfare of the Race.

Every city in the United States is decrying a shortage of residences. In fact, the cities of Europe, like the cities of America, are suffering from a house famine. There simply isn't shelter in the cities for the great numbers of people crowding into them.

These people do not come from the skies. They have not been born and grown to manhood and womanhood over night. They were in the world yesterday, somewhere. Today they are crowding into the cities. That they are coming from the farms there isn't the shadow of a doubt. And thereby hangs the most terrible menace the race has faced for centuries, declares the Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

Not only are cities becoming overcrowded, but in the small towns it is the same. The farmers are giving up their places on the farms and going to the cities and towns and villages. The chances are next year's census will show a tremendous decrease in the rural population of this country; it is bound to do so, for there are more people leaving the farms than are taking their places on the farms—and it isn't necessary to explain the reason. High wages in the cities, the world's war, the unrest, the uncertainty of everything—these things are operating to bring about a condition of affairs that is going to cause the world a tremendous amount of trouble.

We hear a great deal about improved conditions upon the farm. The telephone, rural free delivery, good roads, the automobile, improved machinery and labor saving devices—these things all go to make life upon the farm more attractive. High prices for produce go to make farming more profitable. Yet in the face of all of this the people are leaving the farms and coming to the cities in such numbers that shelter cannot be provided rapidly enough to keep the rain off their backs. In the final day of reckoning—well, we have no desire to indulge in pessimism. But who is going to raise the food for the people of the world if the exodus from the farms continues?

She Needed Them.
Another subway story! Lawsee, the woods is full of them—so is New York. This one has to do with another fat woman. She was so fat that she palpitated while she stood hanging on for grim death to the strap above her head. Her short, stubby arm was tired; so was the rest of her.

A wee bit of a kid, about ten, we judge him to be, looked up and saw. His training had evidently been of the right sort. Jumping to his feet, he doffed his cap and proffered his seat to the fat woman. A girl of perhaps eight became indignant at once. "Robert," she said in her severest tone of voice, "what do you mean by offering the lady one seat? She cannot sit in it." Then turning to the woman, she said in all seriousness: "Madam, you can have my seat, too; then you will be able to sit down."

The fat lady stood the smiles of the passengers until the next stop was reached. Then she made herself conspicuous by her absence.—New York Times.

Australia's Young Citizens.
The problem of destitute children was recently considered by the emigration sectional committee of the British national council of women at Caxton hall, when Kingsley Fairbridge described the work of the children's farm schools in western Australia. Mr. Fairbridge, who is headmaster at the schools, explained that the institution was started in 1909 by the Child Emigration society, when a party of destitute children was sent out from England to Western Australia. The school dealt with the poorest children they could find. In addition to their education, which was supplied by the government of Western Australia, they received instruction in agriculture, and each child turned out by the school was a new citizen for Western Australia and a potential farmer.

Riches in Apricot Stones.
Over $1,000,000 is made every year from apricot stones in California, from which the chemist extracts two oils, one known as bitter oil of almonds, the other a new substitute for olive oil.

FOR BRAVING SHELLS IN THE ARGONNE

War nursing was to Miss Edna Coughlin, a Goodrich nurse of Akron, O., just what she expected. But the reward was more than she expected. She was the only woman nurse who saw field service in the advanced area of the Argonne sector, bravely administering to the gravely wounded under the fire of shell and aerial bombs. When General Leonard Wood visited Akron recently, he paused to pin on the Distinguished Service Medal—for heroic performance—the reward she had not expected. She is now Mrs. W. J. Quinlan.
