Did you ever go into a store that was full of clerks and have them keep on arranging things on a counter or shelf, or continue a conversation they were carrying on with never even a nod of welcome to the customer who had just entered? After you had been in there about half an hour they would discover you vainly trying to wait upon yourself and declare that they just didn't see you when you came in. What usually happens to such a business house? Why, just this, the trade goes to a place where the customers are treated with deference and where the clerks show plainly in their greeting and manner that they are desirous of pleasing you to the extent of their ability. When you go into a store doesn't it make you feel much more welcome if the clerk meets you at the door with a cheery, "Good morning! What can I do for you?" or "How can I help you this morning?" True, counters and showcases need dusting and rearranging but isn't the proper time for that when there are no customers in? And it is nice to visit with your customers, traveling salesmen, etc., but sometimes a customer hasn't all morning to wait, and if your visitor is interested in what you are saying he will wait; if he isn't he is probably glad to get away. If this hits you brush the cobwebs from your sky and see what you can do in the way of remedying it. In other words "build up your business by building up yourself."

"All in your eye" is a saying expressive of imaginary trouble. It is more probable that real trouble will be all in the eyes.

"Cheshire Cat" Grin

Variouly Explained

The expression, "to grin like a Cheshire cat," has never been satisfactorily accounted for. It was popularized by Lewis Carroll in his "Adventures of Alice in Wonderland." In this pretty story the Cheshire cat is a grinning cat which makes its appearance to give Alice advice. The first time the cat suddenly disappears. But after considerable persuasion by Alice the cat returns and then disappears gradually and almost imperceptibly. The last thing to vanish was the grin, says the Detroit News.

It is said that cheese originally made in Cheshire, England, was molded into forms like a grinning cat. The word "Cheshire" is pronounced "Chesh-ir," with the accent on the first syllable and the "i" short as in "irritate." There is also a humorous explanation of this phrase. Cheshire is one of those counties in England known as counties palatine—that is, the count or earl has certain royal privileges. This idea, it is said, is so funny to the cats in that region that they are perpetually amused at it. A person who shows his teeth when he laughs is said "to grin like a Cheshire cat." The expression is especially applied to a forced or sneering smile.

Union Revival services
