CROSS-WORD PUZZLE No. 6 "THE HUMDINGER"

Not so beautiful, but a bear for hard words, is the Humdinger. No. 26 Vertical is the only real stumper, though, because it's only in the big dictionary. The interlock with simpler words makes the solution possible for even the inexperienced.

A judge in delivering the charge to the jury said: "Gentlemen, you have heard the evidence. The indictment says the prisoner was arrested for stealing pigs. The offense seems to be getting to be a common one. The time is coming when this must be put a stop to; otherwise, gentlemen, we shall none of us be safe."

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Jan. 15.—Victor P. Hessler of Dayton, senior in electrical engineering, is instructing in the physics department at O. A. C. this term. He has charge of one class and laboratory section. After completing his work at O. A. C., Mr. Hessler intends to take up advanced work in an eastern university in pursuance of a doctor's degree. He is a member of Acacia fraternity.

Dumb Brutes Capable of Deepest Affection

I have spent most of my life among animals, and in a part of the world where you may be a week or two without seeing a white face you become rather pally with dogs and horses and sheep and cattle and birds. You get to know them and their ways and traits as well as you know yourself, and the love and affection in all animals is very beautiful.

Of the love of a dog for man the whole world knows. It is the only animal that really loves man with a great love—the only animal that looks you in the eyes and tells you so. Other animals have affection for one, but never love like this.

On my farm I have a mare four years old and a horse of two years—they are brother and sister. When the mother died the young horse did not leave the spot for days. The sister has mothered it ever since. They are inseparable—eating together, drinking together, sleeping together—and if I take one away to work they are neighing to each other the whole time.

But the finest love in animals is the maternal love. The self-sacrifice and devotion of the female in all animals for their young is one of the most beautiful things in the world.

Timid sheep, with their lambs, will stamp their fore feet and walk boldly up to anything that comes near. A cow will hide its calf in long grass and graze, apparently unconcerned, some way off. But go near that long grass where the calf has been hidden, and the cow, which has been looking at you out of the corner of her eye all the time, will come at you full tilt.—Leonard Fleaming, in London Mail.

Fishermen Who Have No Use for Hook and Line

The negroes of Jamaica have an odd method of getting fish. They go out on a calm moonlight night and row about until they notice a spot where the water is ruffled. This means that a shoal of red snapper is on the surface.

Rowing to the spot one of the men begins beating on the side of the boat with a wooden club. The fish are terrified and jump high into the air, and some at least are sure to fall into the boat. From a dozen to twenty may be caught out of one shoal, and since they are large fish, weighing from two to five pounds apiece, the take is well worth having.

The writer has seen mullet taken in similar fashion off the Florida coast. The boat, however, went out on a dark night and was provided with a strong flare in the bows. Then the surface of the water was beaten with the oar blades and the mullet jumped in scores, quite a number falling in the boat nets stretched to receive them.

Told of Crime in Sleep

Talking in his sleep, a man in Ceylon furnished the police with a clue which has led to the arrest of several men as murderers. An English planter was killed on his estate by five or six natives. It seemed for some time that the mystery of their identity would never be solved. Just when the police were beginning to despair of finding any clue whatever, they discovered a man sleeping near the scene of the murder, and talking in his sleep. What he said was so astounding that the police stopped to listen. As a result of what they heard, they obtained sufficient evidence to later arrest the man who had so unwittingly furnished the clues and four other men who had taken part in the crime.

Put Ban on Chess

During the Thirteenth and the four following centuries chess was quite commonly played and Jewish literature contains numerous rabbinical opinions for and against it. After a visitation of the plague in 1575, the Three Rabbis of Cremona declared that, with the exception of chess, all games were "primary evils and the cause of all troubles." After the great fire at Frankfurt-on-the-Main in 1711, the Jewish community passed a resolution forbidding for a period of 14 years the playing of chess. When played on the Sabbath, it became customary in Germany to use chessmen made of silver in honor of the day.

Looking Ahead

They had been planning their wedding, and had decided on a magnificent ceremony. "How about the honeymoon?" she asked, coyly. "Well, what do you say to a trip to France?" he asked. "But," she objected, "you know how afraid I am of sea-sickness, dearest. I can't stand the water for even ten minutes." "Yes," he replied, tenderly, "but you ought to know that love is the best remedy for that." "Perhaps," she said, slowly and doubtfully. "But—but what about the return trip."—London Tit-Bits.

Early Army Chaplains

The War department says that an act of the Continental congress, passed July 5, 1776, provided that a chaplain be appointed for each regiment in the Continental army, and that their allowance be increased to $33 a month. The rank held by chaplain in the American army during the Revolutionary war has not been ascertained, nor has it been ascertained whether the rank was the same for all chaplains in the Continental army at any given time, or whether the rank differed in the militia of the several colonies of states that furnished troops for that war.

Farm Reminders

Rhubarb roots that were dug and frozen for forcing are placed on a thin layer of soil in a dark basement or shed where the temperature ranges from 45 to 60 degrees. They are then covered with an inch or two of soil, well sprinkled with water and allowed to bear stalks. With occasional sprinklings the stalks are market size - - 10 to 14 inches - - in about four weeks. They are of excellent quality and bring good prices, says the experiment station.

If the fruiting wood of the grape vine tends to get too far from the trunk, the suckers or water sprouts may be converted into strong bearing wood for the following year by cutting them back to one or two buds. By thus looking forward a year in pruning the location of the bearing area may be kept in control, according to experiment station reports.

Pruning and training loganberry vines though usually associated are in fact two distinct operations in Oregon plantings, says the experiment station. The pruning removes portions of the vine while training disposes of the parts of the vine left for bearing, on the trellis or other support. Both systems vary in Oregon according to the requirements, personal preference, varieties, planting system and methods of cultivation.

Feeding the Oregon laying flock for economical egg production is most profitable when based on the hens' appetites rather than on the requirements of the experiment station finds. The best poultry feed is the one that supplies most economically the necessary food elements.

Crop rotation might lessen the drain on soil fertility even in temperate districts of Oregon, the experiment station says, particularly on organic matter and nitrogen. Suitable rotations including legumes or nitrogen-gathering crops, may increase and maintain soil fertility.

Crossing the Ocean in Colonial Times

A journal written by a tourist who crossed the Atlantic to New York before the year 1700 has recently been discovered. It gives a vivid picture of early shipboard accommodation. The passenger was traveling for pleasure, not emigrating. He was accustomed to the best treatment the traveler of that period could procure.

His journal records that the diminutive sailing vessel set out on its long voyage from Holland bound for New Amsterdam. He begins early in the voyage to complain of the cabin. There was no parlour lounge and writing room in those days. Although he was a first-class passenger, he could not enjoy the luxury of a private stateroom, but shared the little cabin with men, women and children. He notes that the deck above his head was so low that though seated on his trunk writing his journal, he could not sit erect. The space between decks was little more than three feet.

He complains of the rough weather and of the fact that most of the cabin passengers were seasick. There is, besides, frequent comment upon the quality of the drinking water, which did not improve in the two months required for the crossing. The bathing facilities were primitive, consisting of a few buckets of salt water enjoyed in a more or less secluded corner of the deck.

The traveler girds at the customs regulations. It is recorded that the sea chests and rolls of clothing were turned inside out with no consideration for the feelings of the owners. The writer noticed that the passengers who enjoyed political positions were not molested.

Wouldn't Stand for That

She was a plump widow, with two charming daughters, and was beginning to wear her "woods" lightly. All the same, when the minister called she said: "Ah! I feel the loss of my poor, dear husband very much. I never have any appetite for anything now." The parson was all sympathy, and in the attempt to cheer her by pointing out what a comfort to her her daughters must be, replied: "I can quite understand that but you are soled in—"
