American Forest Week

April 27.—May 3
Prevent Forest Fires

By Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States.

We do not know the forest situation down to the last acre and board foot, but we know it well enough to make us think and act. Of the old forest the first explorers met we have in area only one-sixth left and in bulk of timber less than one-third. From over-cutting and fire we have left on our hands something like 80 million acres of denuded forest land, most of it unfit for farming. Then we have about 250 million acres of second-growth forest, much of it poor in quality and amount. Three-fourths of our cut is still from virgin forests, difficult and distant of access so that their products must pay for long freight hauls to reach the chief markets.

Expended roughly, we have left about 745 billion cubic feet of timber. From this the annual drain is 25 billion cubic feet. This total drain is most significant when we reflect that, toward offsetting it we have an annual timber growth of only 6 billion cubic feet; and even in our young forest, where this growth is taking place, cutting has already outstripped growth. We must face the situation that at this rate we are, not far from timber exhaustion.

(Address before Utilization of Forest Products Conference, Nov. 19, 1924.)
