It costs less to paint than not to paint when you use Acme Quality

This good paint protects buildings, implements, trucks, tractors and wagons so completely from the danger of rust and decay that it actually costs less to paint than not to paint.

You know the serious damage that rust can do. And you know what happens when things are left exposed to the weather, even for a few months. The walls of your buildings protect your property that is inside of them. But the walls, too, need protection, for without paint nothing stands in the way of the damage that can be done by rust, rot and dampness.

Protect your property with Acme Quality, and you not only guard it against the elements but you also add dollars-and-cents value in the added good looks that come with the use of this paint.

There is a particular Acme Quality product for each particular farm surface—one made especially for each individual job. Come in and let us show you how much more satisfactory, and how much more economical it is to use this famous brand.

The greatest problem of the Oregon poultryman is that of increasing average production of his entire flock, says H. E. Cosby, poultry specialist for the college extension service. Many different methods are used in computing average production. The fairest way, according to Cosby, is the so-called "arithmetic mean" method whereby the total number of layers is recorded the first of each month. By totaling the 12 months and dividing by 12 the average laying flock for the year is computed. Dividing the total number of eggs by the average laying flock gives the average number of eggs per bird for the year.

Farm Reminders

Oregon farmers are taking a more active interest in the probable total production, the probable consumption, the exportable surplus, and the price trends of the particular commodities they produce.

To help them understand the situation as it exists now, as well as its present trend, facts bearing on it have been assembled by a committee of the extension service under the direction of R. S. Resse, farm management specialist. The facts were gathered by the federal agricultural statistician for Oregon, the heads of departments of the Oregon experiment station, the county agricultural agents and the federal department of agriculture.

As a whole, the agricultural outlook for 1925 is more favorable than it has been for five years. The purchasing power of farm products more nearly balances the cost of things farmers buy than it has at any time during this period. In December 1924 the relative wholesale price of non-agricultural commodities was 157, or 57 points above the pre-war level, while the farm products on the same date stood at 119 or 39 points above the pre-war condition.

The purchasing power of farm products for 1924 was 86, which was 5 points better than of 1923, and 10 points better than that of 1922, and 14 points better than it was in 1921.

As analyzed by the United States department of agriculture, this economic viewpoint and interest has been encouraged by the following facts: farming has long since passed the self-sufficing stage and has entered the big world channels of trade. An economy program was forced by several years of hardships and economic depression. Land values have reached the point where their former opportunities of increase and speculation have disappeared [at least for some years], making it necessary for operator to show a profit from production alone.

If some one were to ask you this question:

"What are the two most useful, serviceable, and cheapest mechanical devices used today in the American Home," what would you answer? There would doubtless be a variety of answers. But—The Electric Washing Machine is beyond doubt the greatest labor saving device ever invented for the home. That is one of the two. When you consider the cost of doing the average family washing once a week costs about twenty-five or thirty cents a month, can you think of anything equally serviceable and comparably cheap? The Electric Range comes next with its tremendous power in labor conservation. Think of this. An automatic Electric Range which turns on the energy and turns it off when the oven is just hot enough, cooks the food to perfection, saves a lot of labor, keeps the kitchen clean, will keep the food warm eight hours after the energy is off, well, the numerous wives and mothers who use this kind of fuel for cooking say it can't be beat. Washer? Range? Have you these two useful household necessities? Cooking rates three cents per K. W. H.
