What's Happening In Our Town

Don't mention antiques to Mrs. Ralston

YOU see, when she began to go in for them, she decided to get rid of all her old furniture, including Horace's favorite chair. It had been in his family as long as he could remember, and he protested. "But it's so shabby," said Mrs. Ralston. "Oh, if that's all, I'll fix it." So he did it over with Acme Quality Varnolac, and she consented to let him keep it—in his den. One day she was showing a distinguished collector her new antiques. He was strangely unenthusiastic—until he happened to catch a glimpse of Horace's discreetly hidden chair. He simply pounced upon it—said it was one of the finest examples he had ever seen, and all that offered fabulous sums for it. Horace told him the whole story, and Mrs. Ralston was speechless with chagrin. Now when anyone mentions antiques, Horace says: "My collection is small, but good."

Community Building

Organization Works for "Better" American Homes

For the past three years several hundred American communities have organized and held better-homes demonstrations, under the guidance and with the advice of the national educational organization, Better Homes in America. Plans are now under way for extending this public service to hundreds of additional communities in 1925, as well as in those communities which make a "better homes" demonstration an annual affair.

Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, is president of the organization. The active direction of Better Homes in America is in the hands of Dr. James Ford, executive director. Doctor Ford is a member of the faculty of Harvard, having been granted a special leave of absence in order to undertake this educational work. Better Homes in America is supported entirely by public and private gifts.

There are numerous excellent reasons why every community in the country should take advantage of the existence of this organization and, with its help, demonstrate some or all of the ways in which American homes may be made better places to live in. This means making the most of the family income in the direction of comfort, economy and beauty. The better-homes organization directs its principal efforts toward aiding the American family of small or moderate means.
